Overview & Current Events

Two Harbors Investment Corp. is a residential mortgage real estate investment trust (mREIT). As such, it focuses on residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS), residential mortgage loans, mortgage servicing rights, and commercial real estate. The trust derives nearly all of its revenue in the form of interest through available-for-sale securities.

In early May (5/6/20), Two Harbors reported financial results for the first quarter. Quarterly earnings-per-share came in at $0.25, flat sequentially. Book value per share declined sequentially to $6.96 from $14.54. The trust also disclosed advanced talks with two major banks regarding servicing advance facilities which should further shore up their balance sheet after they were able to make every margin call during the quarter despite the volatility and even emerged from the quarter with a $1.2 billion unrestricted cash liquidity position.

Two Harbors has a history of generating strong total returns for investors, despite book value per share declining significantly from $18.9 in 2010 to $6.96 at the present. Since its inception in October 2009, the stock has outperformed the BBG REIT MTG index's total return. The three main reasons for this are that it pairs its MSR assets with Agency RMBS, utilizes a variety of instruments to hedge interest rate exposure, and utilizes a unique portfolio of legacy non-Agency securities.

Currently the company faces a few headwinds to growth, including higher prepayment speeds due to low interest rates driving an increase in mortgage refinancing, higher yielding non-Agency securities rolling off the balance sheet and being replaced with lower rate assets, and lower TBA dollar roll income from higher implied financing costs. Most of all, the disruption caused by the coronavirus outbreak will harm earnings as mortgage defaults surge, resulting in considerable book value write downs and earnings declines.

Two Harbors Investment Corp. (TWO)

Updated July 7th, 2020 by Samuel Smith

Two Harbors has historically traded at a sizable discount to book value due to its riskier (highly leveraged) business model and the company's nearly annual dividend cuts. With the coronavirus pandemic poised to ravage its industry and leave a very uncertain future outlook, we are reducing our fair value multiple estimate even further to 0.7 times book value.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2025
Payout[4]	124%	143%	70.9%	226%	77.0%	91.6%	111%	NA	NA	95.0%	94.0%	83.3%

Two Harbors' high dividend yield indicates that the market has some concerns about the safety of its current dividend payment as well as the sustainability of the business model as a whole. In general, the non-recurring nature of the loans within the mortgage REIT business model make Two Harbors somewhat less of a sleep-well-at-night stock than some of its peers in the equity REIT universe. We have serious questions about its dividend safety through all economic environments, particularly in light of its very high current payout ratio. While the REIT was founded in the wake of the last recession, we believe that – due to its leverage ratio of over 7x – it will struggle in the next economic downturn.

The company lacks any significant competitive advantage other than some economies of scale and significant diversification that adds some stability to performance. However, we see nothing that will lead to outsized returns in the future – all conditions being constant. We believe past outperformance was largely due to a strategy that aligned with market forces, though some of it was due to a shareholder-friendly dividend policy and solid management performance.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Two Harbors has sold off heavily with the coronavirus outbreak, and for good reason as the trust has experienced massive book value destruction as well as a steep dividend cut. While the stock has gotten beaten down so much that it offers a 9.4% dividend yield despite the dividend cut, investors should be cautioned that there is a great deal of risk and uncertainty associated with this yield. Therefore, the expected 9.2% total annualized returns should only be pursued by those with a high risk tolerance. Investors looking for stable income should steer clear of this stock.
