Overview & Current Events

TJX is a leading off-price retailer of apparel and home fashion goods in the U.S. and worldwide. It currently has 4,141 stores in nine countries and a market cap of $55 B.

TJX has grown its revenues and its earnings per share every year for more than a decade. Throughout its 40-year history, it has experienced a decline in its same-store sales in only one year. This degree of consistency is exceptional and proves the strength of the business model of the company and its perfect execution.

TJX surpassed the $35 B hallmark in revenues last year and is poised to approach the $40 B threshold next year. While several retailers are closing stores as a result of losing market share to Amazon, TJX has not been affected by Amazon. The key is that TJX offers great discounts on an attractive selection of merchandize while it also cultivates a “treasure-hunting” experience, which cannot be imitated by the online giant.

The latest earnings report of TJX confirmed its promising prospects. The company grew its same-store sales by 3% and its total sales by 12% in Q1. In addition, it observed a strong start in the running quarter and thus raised its guidance for this fiscal year from about $4.04 to $4.07 (excluding the benefit from the recent tax reform).

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2023
EPS	$1.01	$1.42	$1.65	$1.99	$2.55	$2.83	$3.15	$3.33	$3.53	$3.87	$4.85	$6.80
DPS	$0.22	$0.24	$0.30	$0.38	$0.46	$0.58	$0.70	$0.84	$1.04	$1.25	$1.56	$3.10

Thanks to the strong business performance and a $0.73 benefit from the recent tax reform, the analysts expect TJX to grow its EPS from $3.87 to $4.85 this year. This is $0.02 higher than the upper limit of the guidance of the management but the latter has always provided conservative estimates.

While the company has grown at impressive rates in the past, it is only natural that it has decelerated as it has grown bigger. It has thus grown its EPS at a 7% average annual rate in the last three years and is likely to grow its adjusted EPS at the same rate this year. Therefore, it is reasonable to expect the retailer to grow its EPS at a 7.0% average annual rate over the next five years, from $4.85 this year to $6.80 in 2023. Part of this growth will come from share repurchases, as the company has consistently reduced its share count by about 3% per year in the last five years and has confirmed its intention to keep running its share buyback program at a similar pace.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	Now	2023
Avg. P/E	14.6	11.5	13.2	14.0	16.5	18.9	19.0	20.8	21.6	19.2	17.9	16.9
Avg. Yld.	1.5%	1.5%	1.4%	1.4%	1.1%	1.1%	1.2%	1.2%	1.4%	1.7%	1.8%	2.7%

TJX has rallied 28% in the last six months. Consequently, it is now trading at a P/E of 17.9, which is slightly higher than its 10-year average P/E of 16.9. If the stock reverts to its average valuation level within the next five years, it will incur a 1.1% annualized drag due to the contraction of its P/E ratio in this period.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2023
GP/A	68.1%	74.0%	71.3%	74.0%	76.5%	77.3%	76.6%	75.5%	77.5%	74.7%	75.0%	76.0%

As TJX has always offered a lackluster dividend yield, below 2.0%, most income-oriented investors do not have this stock on their radar. However, this is a great mistake. Thanks to its exceptional growth record, the company has raised its dividend for 22 consecutive years at a 23% average annual rate. Last month it raised its dividend by 25%. If it continues to raise its dividend at a similar pace in the upcoming years, the dividend will approximately double within the next three years. Moreover, TJX certainly has the capacity to keep raising its dividend at its historical pace thanks to its markedly strong balance sheet, its reliable free cash flows and its low payout ratio, which currently stands at 32.2%. Therefore, the stock is suitable, not only for growth-oriented investors, but also for income-oriented investors.

In addition, thanks to its off-price business model, TJX is markedly resilient during recessions. To be sure, in the Great Recession, when most companies saw their earnings collapse, TJX grew its EPS by 5% in 2008 and another 41% in 2009. Of course, the retailer was in its high-growth phase back then and hence it is not likely to repeat that performance whenever the next recession shows up. On the other hand, thanks to its recession-proof business model, it is likely to perform much better than most retailers and the broad market upon the next economic downturn.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Thanks to its exceptional growth record, TJX usually trades at a rich valuation. This is the case now, as the stock has rallied 28% in the last six months. If investors hold the stock for the next five years, they are likely to enjoy a 7.7% average annual total return thanks to its 7.0% annual EPS growth and its 1.8% dividend, which will be partly offset by a 1.1% annualized contraction of its P/E ratio. TJX is one of the highest quality retailers around. It makes an excellent buy for the long run when trading below its fair value which is unfortunately not the case currently.
