Overview & Current Events

Founded in 1964 and based in Beaverton, Oregon, Nike is the world's largest athletic footwear, apparel, and equipment maker. The namesake is one of the most valuable brands in the world. The company's offerings focus on six categories: running, basketball, the Jordan brand, football (soccer), training, and sportswear. Nike also owns Converse and Hurley. The $140 billion market cap company had sales of $39.1 billion in fiscal year 2019.

On June 27th, 2019 Nike released Q4 and full year fiscal 2019 results for the period ending May 31st, 2019. For the quarter revenue came in at $10.2 billion, up 4% on a reported basis and up 10% on a currency-neutral basis. Diluted earnings-per-share came in at $0.62 for the quarter, compared to $0.69 previously, driven by revenue growth, margin expansion and a lower share count, offset by higher selling expense and a higher tax rate.

For the year revenue came in at $39.1 billion, a 7% increase on a reported basis and an 11% improvement on a currency-neutral basis, with demand led by Nike Direct. Diluted earnings-per-share came at $2.49 for the year, compared to $1.17 in fiscal year 2018. However, this number is not directly comparable due to tax reform. (On an adjusted basis, earnings-per-share grew from $2.40 previously.) Inventories totaled $5.6 billion, up 7% compared to Q4 2018. Cash and short-term investments equaled $4.7 billion, down $582 million as net income was more than offset by share repurchases, dividends and investments in infrastructure.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Since 2007, Nike has been able to grow earnings-per-share by an average compound rate of 10.9% per annum. This was driven by a number of factors, including solid revenue growth, margin improvement and share repurchases. Moving forward we believe sustained margin improvement will get more difficult, but there is still ample runway for revenue gains and share repurchases to continue leading the growth charge. In particular, China will be the backbone of Nike's growth story with double-digit growth in that area of the world. There are risks to this thesis, trade concerns chief among them, but we believe Nike's global positioning gives the company a leg up should any unfavorable circumstances come about. Moreover, Nike's relatively recent direct to consumer push could be an ongoing positive for the firm.

While the current dividend yield is unimpressive, this component ought to grow nicely over time as well. Nike has increased its dividend for the past 17 years, with an average annual increase around 15% per annum during the last decade.

Since 2010, shares of Nike have traded hands with an average P/E ratio near 23 times earnings. During the last five years the mark has been close to 26 times earnings. We believe that a low 20's multiple is a fair starting baseline taking into consideration the security's past, the exceptional brand and growth prospects of the business weighed against the notion that growth will ultimately be more, not less, difficult to formulate as time goes on. A premium multiple is justified, to be sure, but we are not comfortable with the current mark of over 30 times expected earnings. At the current quotation, there is the possibility for a substantial valuation headwind. Moreover, share repurchases – which have been an important component of Nike's capital allocation – are becoming less and less attractive at these levels.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

| Year   | 2010 | 2011 | 2012 | 2013 | 2014 | 2015 | 2016 | 2017 | 2018 | 2019 | 2020 | 2025       |
| Payout | 28%  | 27%  | 30%  | 30%  | 32%  | 28%  | 29%  | 28%  | 33%  | 33%  | 33%  | 35% |

Nike's competitive advantage stems from its exceptional brand name and image around the world. In turn, the company has developed distribution capabilities that are hard to replicate. With that being said, China is an important unknown in Nike's growth equation. So far things are going well, but a potential trade war with the U.S. and China would weigh on this growth trajectory.

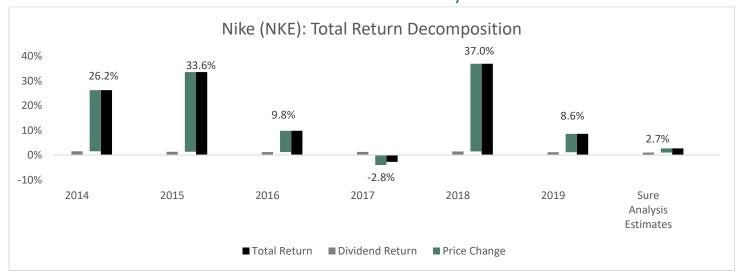

Nike held up quite well during the last recession, posting earnings-per-share of $0.72, $0.86, $0.88 and $0.97 during the 2007 through 2010 stretch. Meanwhile, the dividend kept on increasing during this time. With a current payout ratio near one third of earnings, we expect this payout to continue chugging along for the foreseeable future.

As of the last quarterly report Nike held $4.5 billion in cash, $16.5 billion in current assets and $23.7 billion in total assets against $7.9 billion in current liabilities and $14.7 billion in total liabilities. Long-term debt stood at just $3.5 billion against underlying annual earnings power north of $4 billion.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Shares are up 4% since our last update. Nike is an incredible business with a conservative balance sheet and significant growth opportunities ahead. However, the problem is that investors are well aware of this and have bid shares up accordingly. Total return potential comes in at just 2.7% per annum, stemming from 9.0% expected growth and a 1.0% dividend yield, offset by a 7.3% valuation headwind. Indeed, this potential headwind could very well hinder the majority of the good attributes of the security. Still, we are reluctant to rate shares as a sell and reiterate our hold rating.
