Overview & Current Events

Lamar Advertising traces its lineage back to 1902 when Charles Lamar helped form a small poster trust in Florida. Since that time, the business has grown exponentially into an advertising giant with 350,000 outdoor displays in nearly every state, Canada and Puerto Rico. The trust changed its corporate structure to become a REIT in 2014 and today, it trades with a $7.6 billion market capitalization and produces in excess of $1.6 billion in annual revenue.

Lamar reported Q2 earnings on 8/7/19, revealing revenue growth of 6.9%, AFFO up 2.4%, Diluted AFFO-per-share up 1.3%, and Adjusted EBITDA up 6.2%. While a sizable portion of this growth was due to acquisitions, the trust still saw 2.4% revenue growth and 2.1% EBITDA growth adjusted for acquisitions. This was in large part thanks to the solid same-unit digital revenue performance and local revenue growth, as both grew by 4.3%. The balance sheet also remained in solid shape, with liquidity improving sequentially from $390 million to $429.2 million.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

At times in the past, Lamar has struggled to grow. Indeed, it produced less in FFO-per-share in 2013 than it did in 2008. However, since that time, Lamar has been busy growing organically and through acquisitions, and has grown FFO-per-share very nicely. The trust is experiencing strong growth tailwinds after growing AFFO/share by 8.9% in 2018 and is carrying new acquisitions with it into 2019. That being said, management is guiding for a more subdued 4.5% growth in 2019, showing that the strong growth comps in 2018 were significantly helped by acquisitions. Furthermore, we see it taking a bit of time to fully integrate and synergize the new acquisitions. As a result, we are lowering our FFO/share annual growth forecast from 7% to 6% moving forward.

We see revenue growth as the main driver of growth as Lamar grows organically and through acquisition, so a ~5% revenue tailwind should drive results. The additional revenue should provide some leverage on the trust's largely fixed expense base, improving margins, providing the extra 1% of FFO/share growth. Lamar has significant debt, so interest expense consumes about one-quarter of operating income, but it has done a nice job in recent years of keeping its debt at manageable levels. We forecast the dividend to rise at roughly the rate of FFO-per-share.

Valuation Analysis

Lamar's price-to-funds-from-operations ratio has moved around a lot in the past decade due to the choppy earnings results. However, it has recently stabilized in the 13x-14x range. We see the current valuation as slightly in excess of fair value, which we've estimated at 13 times FFO-per-share due to the choppiness of earnings and the heavily-leveraged, acquisition-focused business model. At today's multiple of 13.2 times 2019 FFO, that implies a slight headwind to total returns in the years to come.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2023
Payout	---	---	---	---	---	---	55%	55%	60%	65%	67%	64%

Lamar's quality metrics have been remarkably stable considering the amount of change the trust has gone through in the past decade in terms of strategy and converting to a REIT. Margins have crept a bit higher over time and while we see some operating leverage on its expense base, gross margins have plateaued. The trust's balance sheet remains around three-quarters encumbered by debt and that should remain the same. Interest coverage has improved markedly in recent years and with a strong FFO growth outlook, it should only improve further. The dividend is about two-thirds of FFO and we see it remaining in that area as the payout keeps pace with FFO growth.

Lamar is somewhat susceptible to recession but during the Great Recession, its FFO-per-share dipped only briefly before recovering. Its immense size is certainly a competitive advantage, and its long operating history and brand it has built over the past century is certainly a long-term asset. Lamar's competitive positioning should continue to improve with its acquisition-heavy strategy moving forward.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Given its attractive yield and growth outlook, Lamar has the potential to generate near double-digit annualized total returns (9.9%). At the same time, we estimate it is trading roughly in-line with fair value due to the leverage and acquisition risk involved, not to mention its recession vulnerable business model. For defensive investors looking for a strong yield, the stock is a hold as it trades slightly in excess of fair value.
