Overview & Current Events

TJX Companies is a leading off-price retailer of apparel and home fashions in the U.S. and worldwide. As of May 2nd, 2020 the company operated a total of 4,545 stores in nine countries. These include 1,273 T.J. Maxx (28% of total), 1,130 Marshalls (25%) and 814 HomeGoods (18%) in the United States. The company generates about $40 billion in annual revenue and $3 billion in net profit.

TJX has grown its revenues and its earnings-per-share every year for more than a decade. Throughout its 40-plus year history, it has experienced a decline in its same-store sales in only one year. This degree of consistency is exceptional and proves the strength of the business model of the company and its execution. Fiscal 2021 will be a rare year with huge setbacks and same-store sales decline for TJX. We expect TJX to remain resilient, against Amazon (AMZN) compared to most other retailers, in the long haul because TJX offers great discounts on an attractive selection of merchandise while it also cultivates a “treasure-hunting” experience, which cannot be imitated by the online giant.

On 05/21/20, TJX released its fiscal Q1 2021 results for the period ending 05/02/20. For the quarter, net sales was $4.4 billion, a 52% decline year over year, a net loss of $887 million, and diluted loss-per-share of $0.74. Its stores had to be closed for about half of the quarter to slow down the spread of COVID-19. They had begun reopening at the end of the quarter. Management expects “its results to be significantly impacted by the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic.” Due to high uncertainties surrounding store reopenings (including its e-commerce sites in the U.S. and the U.K.), the current retail environment, and future consumer demand, the company is not providing any guidance for this year. In March, TJX suspended its share buyback program temporarily. As of May 2, TJX had up to $3 billion for share buybacks. The company is not paying a fiscal Q1 2020 dividend and does not expect to pay a dividend for Q2 either. However, it promises to resume the dividend as soon as the environment and business stabilize. Therefore, we estimate a dividend of $0.46 for fiscal 2021.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

From 2009 through 2015, TJX was able to grow earnings-per-share by 15% per annum. However, this was during a time when the company was adding 900 stores and the net profit margin was expanding from under 5% to over 7%. With TJX generating about 77% of sales in the U.S., its sales and earnings will depend on the health of the U.S. economy. In the short term, TJX’s sales and earnings are expected to be substantially impacted by the coronavirus crisis. However, we expect TJX’s long-term outlook to remain solid, but at a slower pace than before as the firm is coming off a much larger base on the back of an economy that needs time to recover. The company also prudently reduced its originally fiscal 2021 capital spending plan by about two-thirds to $400-$600 million. Because of COVID-19, the company will essentially cut its dividend by half or more in fiscal 2021. However, TJX should resume its dividend down the road. Its payout ratio will be temporarily high in fiscal 2021 but should come down substantially on earnings normalization. A reduced share count from the company's share repurchase program should help boost the bottom line in the future. We expect EPS to be about 80% lower in fiscal 2021, to normalize within two years, and EPS to grow by about 10% through fiscal 2026. For now, we expect a similar trajectory for its dividend.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	Now	2025
Avg. P/E	13.2	14.0	16.5	18.9	19.0	20.8	21.6	19.2	20.5	20.6	97.6	18.0
Avg. Yld.	1.4%	1.4%	1.1%	1.1%	1.2%	1.2%	1.4%	1.7%	1.5%	1.7%	0.9%	1.9%

From fiscal 2011 to 2020, shares of TJX traded with an average P/E ratio of 18.4. We believe a multiple of 18 is more or less fair for a normalized growth rate of about 10%. The stock appears severely overvalued currently. However, on normalized earnings, the P/E would be 19.4 which would be slightly overvalued.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2025
Payout	18%	19%	18%	20%	22%	25%	29%	32%	32%	34%	87%	34%

TJX has a terrific record (EPS was growing during the last recession) driven by its discounted prices and “treasure-hunting” experience. However, for this recession, its stores, including its e-commerce sites were closed temporarily. And there's a chance that they could be shut down again on jumps in COVID-19 cases.

That said, we believe TJX's model has a competitive advantage not just against its look-alike competitors, but even the Amazon's of the world. The precondition is that its stores need to be opened.

The company raised its cash position to $4.3 billion by drawing $1 billion from credit facilities, raising $4 billion from issuing notes at an average weighted rate of 3.85%, etc. Additionally, it also has normalized earnings power of about $3 billion per year. So, we expect TJX to survive through this recession. Notably, TJX paid most of its rent due in Q1 but will be deferring a meaningful portion of its Q2 rent payments to largely in fiscal 2022, which will eat into the EPS for that year. There's high uncertainty around the COVID-19 situation. TJX's payout ratio will be elevated this year. Therefore, management cautiously suspended its dividend. TJX will resume the dividend when the economy/business stabilizes.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

TJX has a good track record, but COVID-19 is hitting it hard this year. In normal markets, the company would grow profits and dividends, and buy back shares. It could take two years for things to normalize before the company resumes growth. At the current valuation, we estimate TJX will deliver annual total returns of about 6.0% over the next five years, consisting of 5.9% earnings-per-share growth, a 1.8% normalized yield, and a -1.5% headwind from a P/E contraction. All told, we rate TJX as a hold at current prices.
