Overview & Current Events

Broadcom designs, develops and sells semiconductors under the following business units: Wired infrastructure, wireless communication, enterprise storage and industrial. Its offerings include data center chips, factory automation, energy systems and power generation, broadband access, and home connectivity. Broadcom is a fabless semiconductor company, which means that the products it designs are manufactured by other companies (so-called foundries). Broadcom domiciled to the US a couple of years ago and is now headquartered in San Jose, CA.

Broadcom reported its third quarter (fiscal 2020) earnings results on September 3. The company generated revenues of $5.8 billion during the quarter, which represents an increase of 5% compared to the prior year's quarter.

Broadcom reported earnings-per-share of $5.40 for the third quarter, which was ahead of the analyst consensus estimate. The company had originally pulled its guidance for 2020 earlier, based on the unknown impact the coronavirus crisis will have during the rest of the year, but it has released guidance for the fourth quarter during the most recent earnings call. The company expects that revenues will come in at $6.3 billion to $6.6 billion, which equates to a meaningful forecasted acceleration in revenue growth on a sequential basis, on top of that the forecast is also ahead of what analysts had expected. It looks like Broadcom is weathering the current crisis quite well.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Broadcom's profitability has exploded over the last decade. Indeed, its earnings-per-share rose more than tenfold between 2010 and 2019. This earnings growth was driven by a significant amount of M&A, the most important one being the merger between Broadcom and Avago Technologies. Broadcom has since made several other major takeovers, including its acquisition of Brocade for $6 billion that closed in late 2017, and its takeover of CA that closed in late 2018. These acquisitions naturally have impacted Broadcom's growth tremendously, so what we see in the above table is not purely the result of Broadcom's organic growth rate. By moving towards acquisitions in the software industry with its CA takeover, Broadcom has found a new way of generating inorganic growth.

Broadcom's biggest market is wireless communication, where the company owns a strong connectivity portfolio that includes advanced LTE, Bluetooth 5.x, Wi-Fi, GNSS (GPS, Galileo, etc.), and so on. Broadcom is also well positioned in the enterprise storage market, where it provides switching and other connectivity solutions and storage products such as SSD controllers. These markets will continue to grow, and even without any major acquisitions, Broadcom's revenues should continue to grow as well. The combination of acquisitions and organic growth should result in solid revenue growth and increasing tailwinds for profitability stemming from improving economics of scale.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	Now	2025
Avg. P/E	11.7	13.6	13.0	13.4	14.7	13.9	13.5	14.4	10.6	13.8	16.7	12.5
Avg. Yld.	0.3%	1.3%	1.7%	2.3%	1.7%	1.3%	1.6%	2.1%	3.2%	3.6%	3.5%	4.8%

Broadcom's shares have risen substantially in recent months, along with broad markets, recovering all of the losses from the beginning of 2020. Shares are trading above our fair value estimate, based on this year's expected net profits. We believe that Broadcom's valuation will decline to same degree in the future. Broadcom's above-average dividend yield of 3.5% adds significantly to the company's total return potential.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2025
Payout	3.9%	17.5%	22.0%	30.4%	25.1%	18.3%	22.0%	30.0%	33.6%	49.8%	59.1%	60.5%

Broadcom's dividend payout ratio has risen considerably over the last couple of years, due to the large dividend increases that Broadcom has offered to its owners. Between 2010 and 2019, Broadcom increased its dividend by an incredible factor of more than 100. Broadcom's dividend still looks quite safe, though, as it is well-covered by both profits as well as by the cash flows that the company generates.

Broadcom did not remain profitable during the last financial crisis, but the company was much smaller and less diversified back then. Due to low fixed costs, as Broadcom is operating a fabless business, and due to a lot of diversification across industries and across geographic markets, the company is better positioned to weather future economic downturns. Due to its strong IP portfolio with more than 22,000 patents, Broadcom is well positioned in the markets it targets, and meaningful market share losses seem unlikely.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Broadcom is one of the largest semiconductor companies in the world. The company's fabless model results in high cash flows and low capital expenditures, which is why Broadcom has ample free cash flows that are available for dividend payments and acquisitions. Industry tailwinds should allow for solid earnings growth going forward, while Broadcom is also weathering the current crisis very well. Due to a somewhat expensive valuation, we still only rate the stock a hold.
