Overview & Current Events

Community Trust Bancorp is a regional bank with 84 branch locations in 35 counties in Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia. It is the second-largest bank holding company in Kentucky and has a market cap of $658 million. Community Trust Bancorp operates with a $5.0 billion balance sheet. Due to its small market cap, it does not belong to the S&P 500 index and hence it is not considered a Dividend Aristocrat even though it has raised its dividend for 40 consecutive years. In mid-January, Community Trust Bancorp reported (1/20/21) financial results for the fourth quarter of fiscal 2020. Its net interest income grew 6.2% while its non-interest income grew 14.9% over the prior year's quarter. Moreover, the bank reduced its provision for credit losses by $1.5 million sequentially, as the effect of the pandemic was limited. However, earnings-per-share dipped -1% over the prior year's quarter, from $0.90 to $0.89, due to two specific transactions in personnel expense, and thus missed analyst's consensus by $0.03.

Most banks are facing material loan losses due to the pandemic, which has caused a severe recession that has forced many companies and individuals to default on their loans. On the bright side, Community Trust Bancorp is a conservatively managed bank, which is resilient to the ongoing downturn. We expect the bank to post nearly all-time high earnings-per-share of $3.60 this year.

Community Trust Bancorp has grown its earnings-per-share at a 4.3% average annual rate over the last decade and at a 4.7% average annual rate over the last five years. We expect the pandemic to subside and the economy to recover in the second half of this year, but interest rates will remain depressed and hence they will provide a headwind to the growth efforts of the bank. Moreover, the non-recurring decreases in the tax rate of the bank, which fueled a great portion of the bottom-line growth in 2018 and 2019, will not be growth drivers anymore. As a result, we do not expect the company to accelerate its growth pattern in the upcoming years. We expect Community Trust Bancorp to grow its earnings per share at a 3.0% average annual rate over the next five years.

assume a price-to-earnings ratio around 12.0 by 2026. In such a case, the stock would enjoy a 3.1% annualized gain thanks to the expansion of its valuation level over the next five years.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Community Trust Bancorp proved that it was well managed in the Great Recession. In the worst financial crisis of the last 80 years, when most banks cut their dividends, this bank remained profitable and continued raising its dividend.

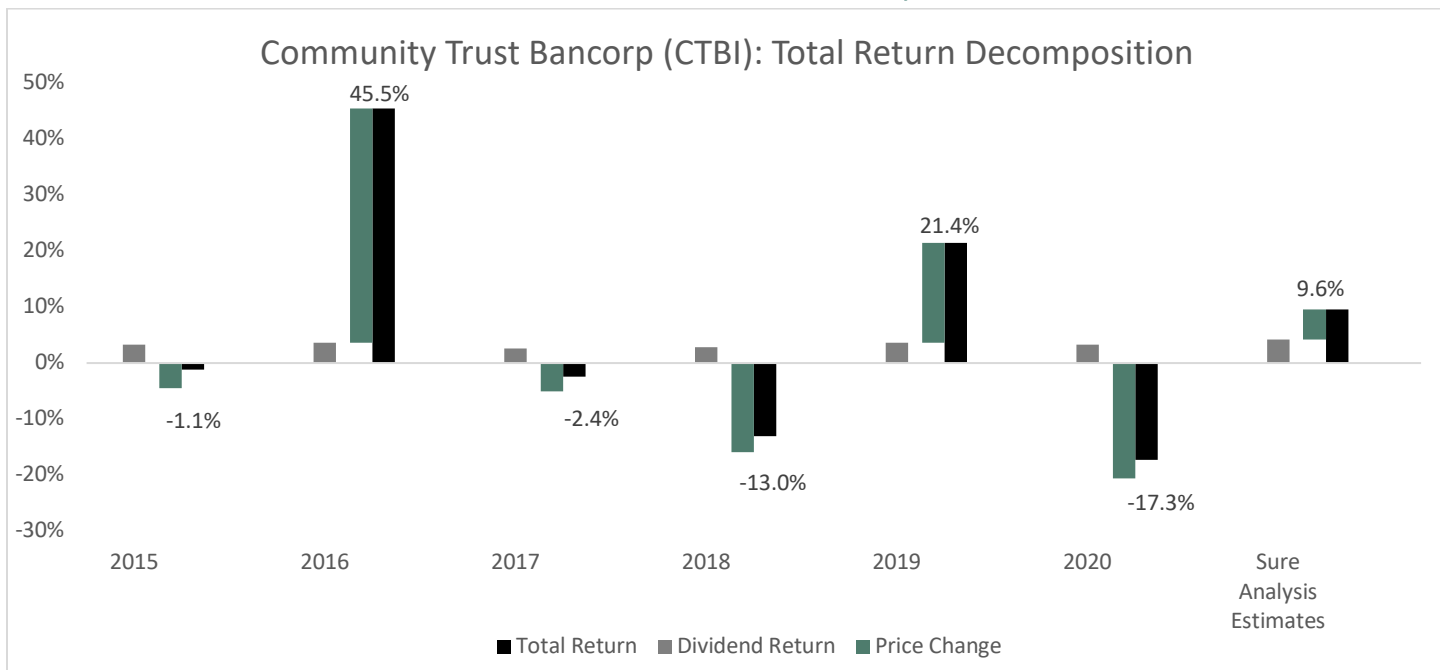

The current recession, which has been caused by the pandemic, caused an -8% decrease in the earnings-per-share of Community Trust Bancorp, but this business performance is superior to that of most other banks thanks to the conservative loan portfolio. To provide a perspective, the bank reported net loan charge-offs of only 0.10% in the most recent quarter.

On the other hand, whenever the market incurs a meaningful correction, Community Trust Bancorp tends to underperform its sector due to its low market cap and its resultant low trading liquidity. Only investors who can remain focused on the fundamentals and ignore pressure on the stock price should consider this security.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Community Trust Bancorp is a well-managed bank, which could offer a 9.6% average annual return over the next five years. The bank accelerated its growth pattern in 2018 and 2019 thanks to higher interest rates and its reduced tax rate but it has now decelerated due to the pandemic and the resultant suppressed interest rates. Despite its 12% rally since our last research report, in October, the stock remains attractively valued. It also has a decent payout ratio, so it has ample room to keep raising its dividend. It is thus eligible for income-oriented investors, particularly given its exceptional dividend growth record. The stock maintains its buy rating for investors who can wait patiently for the pandemic to subside.
