The company is currently experiencing rapid topline growth which we expect to continue over the next half decade as its network and brand power continue to improve incrementally. The company is betting heavily on its precious metals, crypto, and airlines funds to drive assets under management higher.

Furthermore, its economies of scale should drive enhanced profitability, enabling it to grow its dividend as well. Finally, management currently has a share repurchase program underway that could also drive earnings-per-share growth over time. Overall, we see book value per share growing at a low single-digits annualized rate over the next half decade.

While the price-to-book and price-to-earnings ratios have both been very erratic over the past decade, given recent trends and applying a factor of safety to account for uncertainty in the business model, we believe that a price-to-book ratio of 2.5 represents a fair starting baseline.

Based on this assumption, the stock is overvalued at present and could experience multiple compression in the years to come. Furthermore, the yield is also low relative to its history which adds more weight to the argument that the stock is overvalued right now.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	47.1%	242.2%	---	---	---	---	---	70.3%	---	---	100%	100%

The business does not have a big competitive advantage given its small size. However, it is known for its expertise in the precious metals and emerging markets sectors. Given that these are smaller, more niche spaces, it gives it a better chance to compete and develop sticky relationships with clients. A good sign of its competitive positioning is that one of the largest holders of its funds is BlackRock, a top name in the asset management and investments space. It has also been experimenting with cryptocurrency and airlines funds, which seem a bit curious given that they are outside of its areas of expertise. However, they have turned out to be fast-growing popular funds, which has helped the company grow AUM in recent years.

That said, we do not see the security being a safe and reliable income stock. The balance sheet is fairly strong, but earnings per share have been very erratic, dividend cuts have been common and steep, and the business model is too susceptible to competition and disruption to be trusted as a long-term investment opportunity.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

U.S. Global Investors is a bit of a gamble given how erratic its earnings and dividends have been over the past decade. While the company appears to be trending in the right direction thanks to some popular funds that it has recently launched, there is not enough of a competitive advantage or track record here to have confidence in continued robust growth moving forward. As a result, although we assume some positive growth over the next half decade, we rate the security a sell with -9.1% projected annualized total returns.
