Overview & Current Events

Middlesex Water Company was formed in 1897. The company is a water and wastewater utility in New Jersey and Delaware. Its market capitalization is $1.4 billion and it produces about $145 million in revenue annually. Middlesex has paid consecutive dividends since 1912 and has reached its 47th consecutive year of dividend increases.

Middlesex reported first-quarter 2021 results on 5/5/21. The company reported total revenue of $32.54M, an increase of 2.4% compared to $31.77M in the year-ago period. The rise in revenue was largely driven by higher water consumption in the Middlesex System in New Jersey and from customer growth in Delaware water systems. Meanwhile, the operations and maintenance expenses increased from $17.2 million to $18.4 million year-over-year. The company's net income for the quarter fell to $0.8M while diluted earnings per share came in at $0.39 compared to $0.44 in the year-ago period. Middlesex also reported a $0.27525 quarterly dividend.

Earnings-per-share have been rising steadily over the past decade, although gains have been far from linear. The Great Recession saw earnings fall markedly in 2009 but recovery was fairly quick and since 2009, earnings have roughly tripled. We see annualized earnings-per-share growth for the next five years in the low-single-digits as the only meaningful sources of growth will be the rate increase in New Jersey and lower taxes. Adding customers will also help some as it will also improve operational efficiencies through economies of scale.

We are forecasting the dividend to continue its streak of small increases, rising from this year's expected payout of $1.09 to $1.20 in five years' time. Middlesex has an impressive streak of dividend increases that will continue to grow but on a percentage basis the payout will rise rather slowly. The company's payout ratio was far too high during the Great Recession and management pulled way back on dividend increases to avoid a similar fate down the road.

The company's price-to-earnings multiple has risen sharply in recent years and as a result, the stock looks substantially overvalued today. After spending much of the past decade trading at a multiple in the low to mid 20s, the current multiple is 35.7. We are forecasting a decline back towards 22 in five years, indicating a meaningful headwind to total returns. Given the stock's growth profile, it simply cannot sustain a price-to-earnings multiple near its current level.

As a result of the expected multiple contraction and weak dividend growth, we are forecasting the yield to return to normalized levels in the 2% area from the current 1.3%.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	87%	82%	73%	67%	64%	59%	62%	49%	49%	48%	48%	44%

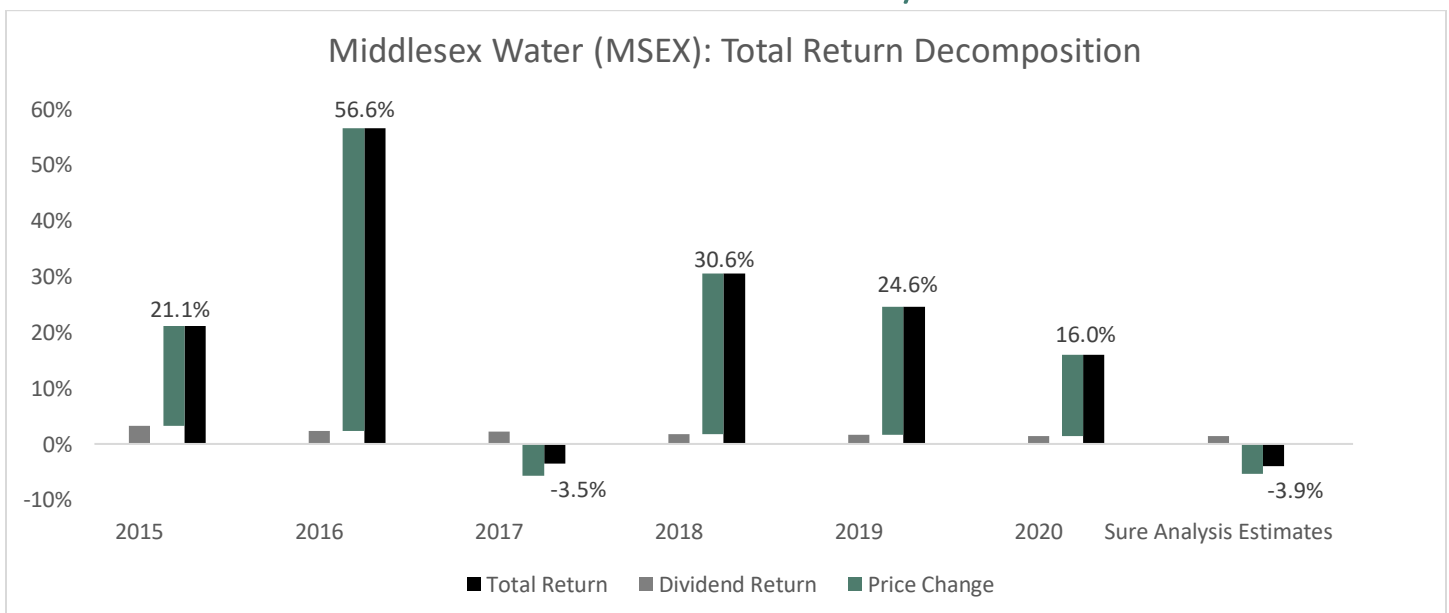

Like many other regulated utilities, Middlesex' quality metrics have remained steady in the past decade thanks to the monopoly-like nature of its assets. However, since pricing is regulated, they cannot drive excessive profitability, thereby explaining the resistance to significant margin expansion. Its assets are mostly debt-financed, allowing for an excellent interest coverage ratio for a utility. Middlesex has the balance sheet to weather virtually any economic storm so there is no question of safety, but obviously growth remains an issue. The payout ratio neared 100% in 2009 but slow growth in dividends and better rates of earnings-per-share growth have led it back down to 48% today. We see that rising slightly over time but overall, the dividend is very safe.

Middlesex' recession performance is decent given that it sells the most basic staple of all and indeed, its revenue was basically flat in 2009 at the height of the recession. Its earnings did not fare quite as well, but it certainly stood up to the downturn. Its obvious competitive advantage is in the monopoly it enjoys in its service area.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Middlesex still looks to be overvalued here. We see annualized total returns of -3.9% going forward as the current yield and 3.9% expected annual earnings-per-share growth will be more than offset by multiple contraction. The company's impressive dividend history is certainly worth noting but the current yield is likely too low to attract income investors. Middlesex would also be unattractive for those seeking growth or value, given the low potential for the former and high current valuation. We recommend selling Middlesex at current prices and investing the proceeds elsewhere due to its negative expected total returns over the next 5 years.
