Overview & Current Events

Exchange Income Corporation engages in aerospace and aviation services by offering scheduled airline and charter services, emergency medical services, after-market aircraft & engines, and pilot flight training services. Additionally, the company is invested in manufacturing window wall systems used in skyscrapers, vessels, and other industrial purposes. Finally, Exchange Income also owns telecom towers, which it leases to America's and Canada's major telecom providers. The company generates just over $1 billion in annual revenue, is based in Winnipeg, Canada, and aims to pay out the majority of its earnings through monthly dividends while it grows through acquisitions. All numbers in this report have been converted into $US, unless specified otherwise.

On August 12th, 2021, Exchange Income reported its Q2-2021 results for the quarter ended June 30th, 2021. Revenue came in at $257.0 million, a 32.1% increase year-over-year (in constant currency). This was due to a growth of $46.38 million in the Aerospace & Aviation segment. This was due to a gradual recovery from last year's depressed results, which had been materially impacted by the pandemic, including decreases in passenger volumes of 90% in some markets. The manufacturing segment's sales also increased 20% to $99.0 million, driven by excellent demand for the company's industrial services. Adjusted EPS was $0.42, against only $0.13 in Q2-2020, due to the severe environment the company went through in the early months of the COVID-19 outbreak and increased expenses related to the pandemic. Despite the challenges, the company's adjusted free cash flow per share remains solid, at $1.23. Including maintenance expenses, this figure was $0.78 during the quarter, a substantial improvement from the $0.58 last year. Hence, the payout ratio to free cash flow post-CAPEX currently stands at 58%, implying that dividend coverage has now normalized. Subsequent to the quarter, Exchange Income acquired Carson Air for $48.7 million, British Columbia's leader in providing medevac services. Due to the mission-critical nature of its operations, Carson should provide a very stable stream of future cash flows. We expect FY2021 EPS of $1.90.

Exchange Income pays dividends on a monthly basis. In its original Toronto listing, the company has never cut its payouts since its first one in 2004, growing them whenever management sees fit. In its TSX listing, its monthly dividend has grown from C$0.10 in 2005 to C$0.19, as of today. However, American investors have mostly seen stable dividends due to the depreciation of the C$ against the $US. We have set our estimated adjusted EPS growth to 7% in the medium term, as the company's bottom line gradually emerges high in a post-COVID-19 world. Current and future acquisitions should also help grow EPS. We retain our DPS growth projections at around 4% during that period, slightly lower than the company's historical (Canadian) average, which prices-in some lag in its financials amid the recent events.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	Now	2026
Avg. P/E	23	19	---	---	10.8	12.7	12.1	11.8	9.9	30.1	17.7	15.0
Avg. Yld.	6.1%	6.1%	5.9%	7.9%	7.3%	7.4%	5.9%	6.8%	5.6%	5.6%	5.4%	5.6%

Exchange Income shares have retained a relatively moderate valuation multiple throughout the years, as its operations mainly involve investing in other businesses (a holding company). The stock has mostly traded based on its yield, which the market has continuously found fitting at around 6%. The OTC shares have remained flat since their 2012 listing due to dividend increases being offset by currency fluctuations. On its Canadian listing, shares have appreciated in line with the company's dividend increases, also retaining a yield of around 6%. We believe a future valuation near 15 times earnings is fair, taking into consideration the security's history, reliable yield, and low-rate environment.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	111%	112%	---	---	77%	81%	77%	73%	59%	161%	96%	84%

At the beginning of the decade, the company had an artificially high payout ratio, mostly attributed to accounting reasons amid its serial acquisitions. Exchange Income's adjusted EPS and free cash flow, at least from 2015, appear to adequately cover the current dividend run rate, allowing for some cash retention to be utilized in times of uncertainty, such as the past year. In line with management's confident dividend coverage guidance, we believe that the stock's dividend remains quite safe. Additionally, while the company's businesses, such as aviation and manufacturing, are very recession-sensitive and subject to brutal competition, they are usually powered by multi-year contracts, resulting in a bit more stable revenues. Further, the company's cargo segment is seeing increased volumes amid growing e-commerce sales due to the work-from-home economy, which should also assist in financials recovering quite fast compared to other (mostly passenger-focused) aviation businesses.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Exchange Income's goal, as its name suggests, is to provide sustainable and growing income to its shareholders. While U.S. investors may have lacked the latter due to currency fluctuations, the CAD/USD rate has mostly been stable over the past few years, which could indicate a more comparable performance to the stock's original Toronto listing going forward. Gradually emerging from COVID-19, Exchange Income's financials remain relatively robust, currently supporting a 5.4% yield. We forecast annualized returns of around 8.4% over the medium term, primarily powered by the company's dividend yield. For conservative investors looking for a reliable stream of income, Exchange Income could be an attractive non-U.S. option. Shares earn a hold rating.
