Overview & Current Events

Edison International is a renewable energy company that is active in energy generation and distribution. Edison International also operates an energy services and a technologies business. The company was founded in 1987 and is headquartered in Rosemead, CA. Edison International has a market capitalization of $21 billion. Total revenue is over $14 billion.

Edison International reported its second quarter earnings results on July 29th, 2021. Core earnings per share came in at $0.94, down from $1.00 in the year-ago period. Q2 GAAP earnings per share stood at $0.84. Net income stood at $318 million. Revenue grew 10.7% to $3.31 billion year-over-year.

Edison International remained highly profitable during the last financial crisis, as the company's earnings-per-share declined by just 12% between 2008 and 2009 and started to rise again during 2010. Edison International is thus not impacted by the strength of the economy to a significant degree. On the other hand, Edison has failed to generate strong growth since The Great Recession.

Edison International's regulated utility business is a slow grower, which is typical for utilities, but the business is a very stable cash cow. Its non-regulated segments, such as renewable energy production via methods ranging from biomass to wind energy, has the potential to grow at a somewhat higher rate. Due to being non-regulated, this business can be more cyclical than the regulated utility operations. Edison has put a focus on renewable energy when it comes to energy production over the last decades. Among other moves, Edison has also sold coal power plants and shut down a nuclear power plant. This was, at least partially, based on heavy regulation in California, where Edison operates, as California no longer allows utilities to generate electric power from coal.

It is likely that Edison International will be able to grow its earnings-per-share at a mid-single digit rate going forward, relatively in line with the growth that the company has generated in the past. Edison International has grown its dividend annually throughout the last decade, with growth accelerating more recently.

Edison International (EIX)

Updated August 3rd, 2021 by Samuel Smith

Edison International trades at 12.1 times this year’s expected net profits, which we view as slightly overvalued. While our fair value estimate of 12.6 times earnings is well below the average over the past half-decade, given the current coronavirus linked uncertainty plaguing the economy as well as some of the aforementioned unique challenges facing utilities in California, we think this is reasonable. As a result, we expect the dividend yield to remain elevated relative to its historic levels.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	39.9%	28.8%	36.2%	34.2%	41.7%	50.3%	49.4%	58.6%	52.8%	57.1%	58.9%	52.1%

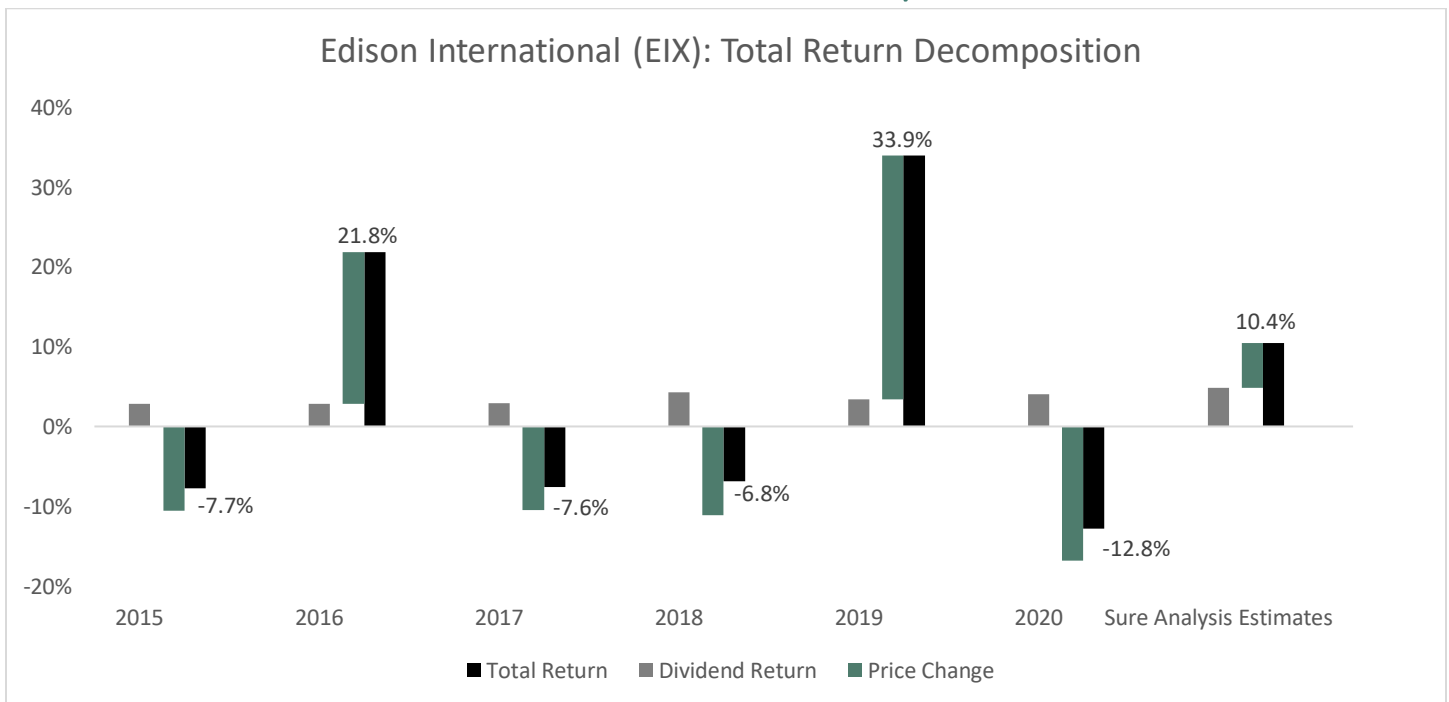

Despite the fact that earnings have seen some ups and downs, Edison International grew its dividend very consistently throughout the last decade. This was only possible due to an increase in the company’s dividend payout ratio, as its earnings-per-share did not grow as consistently. The dividend still looks relatively safe, though, as Edison International’s operations are not overly cyclical. Its dividend growth rate will likely slow down moving forward.

Edison International belongs to California’s largest utilities, as the company serves about 13 million customers in the state. Due to the regulated nature of the utilities business, Edison International does not have to worry about significant competitive pressures. The company’s operations have been very recession-resilient in the past, and this will likely remain the case going forward, as consumers need electricity no matter how well the economy is doing.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Edison International is one of the larger publicly traded utilities. Earnings should continue to grow over the long term with population and economic growth, but fire risks and regulatory overhang from California’s government will drag on total returns. That said, the company offers a very safe 4.9% yield. We expected total annualized returns over the next half decade to be around 10.4%, making the stock a buy.
