Emera reports earnings in $CAD, but the above table displays earnings in $USD per share. The following is based on results in USD; thus, results can be made more volatile due to currency fluctuations. Emera's earnings per share have been choppy in the last decade, with a floor in the 2016 and 2017 years, when the share count began to balloon. As a result, EMRAF has been able to grow earnings by 8.8% on average over the last five years, and 4.8% on average over the last nine years. Moving forward, we estimate Emera can grow earnings at a rate of 5.5% per annum.

The corporation will manage to grow its earnings primarily through rate increases, which the company expects to be in the range of 7.5% to 8.5% from 2021 to 2023. Emera has a large capital program with expected spending of $7.4 billion to $8.6 billion from 2021 to 2023. Over 60% of this capital program is related to decarbonization and reliability projects. Leadership expects the company's EPS and cash flow growth to track rate base growth over the long term. This EPS growth, in turn, is anticipated to lead to 4% - 5% growth in the dividend through to 2022. This, following a 6% dividend CAGR since 2000.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	Now	2026
P/AFFO	16.5	19.3	20.9	12.9	16.9	35.9	36.8	14.5	18.5	13.8	20.7	18.5

The stock has traded at an average multiple of 20.6 and 23.9 over the last nine and five years, respectively. Based on forecasted 2021 earnings, EMRAF trades at a P/E ratio of 20.7. We believe the current valuation to be slightly overvalued and assign a fair value of 18.5 times earnings. If this valuation were to unwind, we could see losses of 2.3% per year as a result.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	66%	77%	86%	52%	62%	152%	172%	75%	86%	66%	93%	87%

The company's dividend payout ratio has not been trouble-free, as it eclipsed the 100% mark in 2016 and 2017 and is forecasted to be in dangerous territory of 93% for the full 2021 year. Despite this, Emera has grown the dividend in $CAD terms for the last thirteen consecutive years. The company continues to guide for mid-single digit dividend growth.

Emera emerged through the Great Recession unscathed, as its electric utility business is an essential service provided to customers in all economic times. In fact, it was during this recession that the corporation resumed increasing its annual dividend after some years-long pause. The company does not possess any strong competitive advantage in comparison to its regulated electric utility peers.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Emera is a Canadian based electric utility company which has paid a dividend every year since 1993 and has raised the dividend in the last thirteen consecutive years. The corporation has a healthy dividend history, but the payout ratio is forecasted to be in the very high range in 2021. The company will grow primarily through executing on its multi-billion dollar capital program and rate increases. Over the next five years, we estimate total annualized returns of 7.3% for the stock, coming from a current yield of 4.5%, a growth rate of 5.5%, and a valuation contraction of -2.3%. We rate the stock a hold at current prices as there is a fair expectation for growth and yield, despite trading 12% above estimated fair value.
