Overview & Current Events

Prologis is the largest industrial U.S. REIT by far, owning approximately 1 billion square feet of real estate in 19 countries. For context, the second-largest U.S. REIT in the sector is Public Storage (PSA), with a market cap of around $63.4 billion, almost half that of Prologis. The company has a diversified rental collection base, comprising of more than 5,800 individual tenants. The company was founded in 1983 and is based in San Francisco, California.

On January 19th, 2022, Prologis reported its Q4-2021 results for the period ending December 31st, 2021. Revenues grew 8.76% to $1.07 billion, while FFO/share increased 17.8% to $1.12. Prologis continues to enjoy record increases in market rents and valuations, which once again boosted its results. Demand for its industrial properties shows no signs of slowing. Global supply chains are still struggling to keep pace with accelerating economic activity, striving for faster fulfillment rates and operational resilience, assisting the company's results. Management wrote that "While 2021 was a year of many records, most of the benefit from the current environment will be realized in the future" in this context. Prologis' debt as a percentage of its total market cap keeps falling as well, dropping to a healthy 13.5% from 16.7% at the end of September. The company's weighted average borrowing rate also declined from 2.1% to 1.7% sequentially, illustrating the capacity of its resilient financials to attract cheap financing. Finally, the REIT's weighted average remaining lease term stands at 4.2 years, contracting quarter-over-quarter (from 4.4 years) amid a lack of noteworthy lease extensions during the period. Due to the ongoing favorable market environment, management guided towards a very fruitful FY2022 outlook, projecting an FFO/share of $5.00 to $5.10. We have utilized the midpoint in our estimates.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2027

Shares²	460	486	500	521	526	530	567	631	754	754	764	1400.0

Over the past five years, FFO/share CAGR has been around 12.4%, while DPS CAGR has been about 7.4% over the same period. The company's growth shows no slowdown signs, continuing to acquire and develop essential logistics properties globally. Management's impressive guidance and comments keep us confident about our FFO/share growth estimates, which we retain at 9%. Last year, Prologis raised its DPS by 8.6% to an annualized rate of $2.52. To match its confident hike, we raised our DPS growth estimate at 8%, which we retain for the time being. Future performance could end up even stronger, but we are comfortable with this expected growth rate for the time being.

Prologis (PLD)

Updated January 20th, 2022 by Nikolaos Sismanis

Over the past decade, Prologis has retained relatively reasonable valuation multiples considering its rapid growth, mainly ranging from 15 to 25 times its underlying funds from operations. However, because COVID-19 adversely affected various REITs, investors quickly rushed to Prologis' secured cash flows, expanding this figure to the low 30s as of lately. Safety and growth come at a high price and, as a result, the stock is currently trading at 30.2 times this year's expected FFO/share. Despite the company's excellent metrics and industrial properties being one of the most resilient real estate spaces during the ongoing pandemic, we believe that shares are likely to undergo a valuation compression in the medium term. We believe that a fair P/FFO would be around 24. This multiple should reflect the company's growth prospects and its unique qualities more reasonably. Investors are likely to continue appreciating Prologis' top-notch financials highly. Hence, we do expect a valuation compression, but we won't be surprised if the overvaluation persists.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	93%	64%	70%	68%	65%	63%	63%	64%	61%	61%	50%	48%

Prologis appears to be one of the safest choices in REITs during this period of uncertainty in other real estate industries. It features a healthy customer base consisting of huge enterprises that provide essential logistics services during the pandemic. Its occupancy rate remains profoundly strong at 97.4%, and management's impressive guidance points towards another year of high growth. Further, the company's payout ratio is quite reasonable at just around 50%, which could easily support a potential acceleration in DPS growth, let alone comfortably sustaining the current dividend if any hurdles were to arise. Additionally, the company's low and declining financing costs make for a noteworthy growth catalyst. Since a substantial expense for REITs is interest payment due to their continuous debt issuance, lowering these outflows should further boost the company's core FFO/share going forward. Considering that creditors have little to no demands based on Prologis' pristine financials, coupled with the company being the largest U.S. REIT in the sector, we find it incredibly unlikely that other REITs could provide more competitive rental growth rates as well.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Investors looking to buy into a growing REIT with such a diversified tenant base have limited options nowadays. In our view, Prologis combines growth at a substantial margin of safety. However, income-oriented investors may find its relatively low yield underwhelming due to the stock's expanded valuation. Additionally, due to the possibility for a heavy valuation compression, our stock's annualized total return forecast is 5.9%. We feel that Prologis features great qualities and the stock could be an attractive dividend growth option. Still, it is steeply overpriced at its current levels. Prologis earns a hold recommendation from Sure Dividend as a result.
