Overview & Current Events

Chesapeake Utilities Corporation (CPK) is a diversified energy delivery company operating primarily in the Mid-Atlantic region and engaged in distribution of natural gas, propane gas and electricity. Founded in 1947, this $2.3 Billion market cap company has raised its dividend every year since 2004.

Chesapeake reported Q1 2022 earnings on May 3rd, 2022. For the quarter earnings-per-share equalled $2.08, an increase of $0.12 over the $1.96 reported in Q1 2021. The company declared a new quarterly dividend of $0.535 per share, an 11% increase over the previous quarterly dividend. This brings the company's forward dividend to $2.14, an amount well covered by the company's earnings.

The quarter was characterised by the acquisition of Diversified Energy, and several other natural gas infrastructure assets, including metering stations, pipeline expansions, etc. Despite inflationary headwinds the company began the year with solid earnings growth and means to continue to capitalize on its organic growth initiatives which have so far led to year-over-year customer growth of around 5%. The company also reiterates its long-term capital expenditures guidance of around $1 billion in 2021 through 2025. EPS guidance also remains around $6.05 to 6.25 for 2025.

Utility companies are often seen as stable businesses with low volatility in their dividends, at the expense of limited growth opportunities. Chesapeake Utilities certainly has the earnings and dividend stability, but over the past decade it seems to have successfully dodged the low growth drawback that characterizes many of its competitors.

There's only so long that a company can swim against the current however, and its most recent organic customer growth guidance of around 5%, well below its 10% average over the past decade, indicates that the business is maturing in a way that is bringing its fundamentals closer to those of its peers. Although it is still an above average company within the utility sector. It's for this reason that we estimate a 6% earnings growth over the next 5 years, with earnings in 2027 of around $6.69. This estimate is in line with the company's own guidance and represents a significant slowing down of the business compared to its performance in the past decade.

Valuation Analysis

Over the past decade Chesapeake has consistently traded at a premium and this premium has only increased over time to its current valuation of 26 times earnings. While the company's fundamentals are certainly impressive, it's clear that the valuation that investors have given the company has been lofty. While it's possible that this premium will continue to be paid by investors, given the expected slowdown of organic growth, the current overvaluation, and the expected interest rate increases we would expect the company to be re-rated over the coming years to around a 15 P/E. This is in line with the general market average, but a significant downturn to its current valuation.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

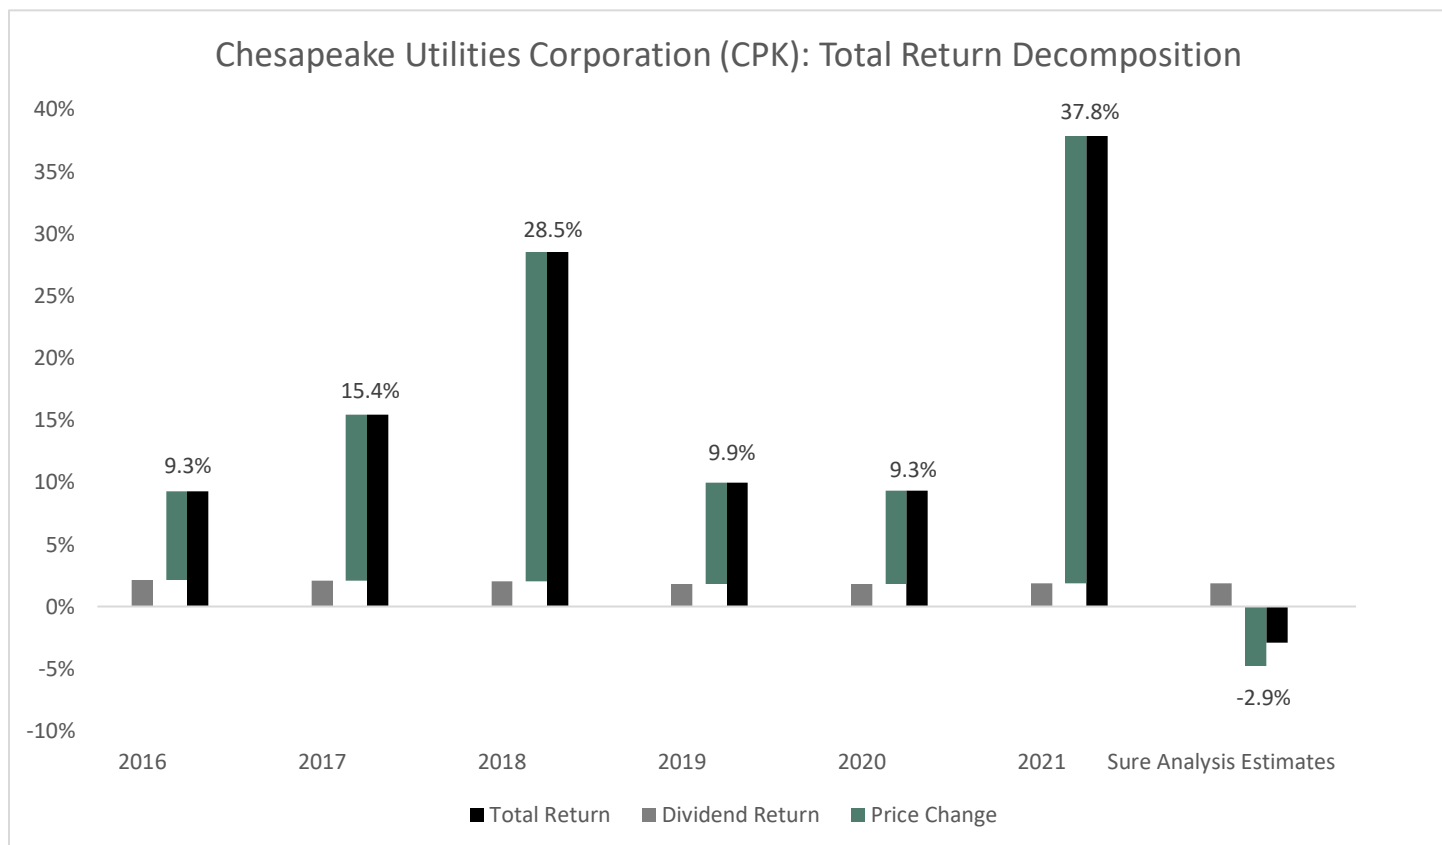

Year	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2027
Payout	48%	45%	43%	42%	42%	47%	40%	42%	40%	39%	41%	41%

Chesapeake has managed to provide above average returns over the past decade as a result of its unique business model that straddles the line between regulated and non-regulated utilities. By having parts of its business regulated, it has managed to maintain a consistent and stable earnings power that allows it to comfortably pay consistently increasing dividends, at the same time its unregulated business brings in above average organic growth that has only recently begun showing signs of slowing down. This strategy has allowed it to outperform its competitors and become a truly high-quality business that most investors would be happy to own.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

While there is no doubt about the quality of the business, nor the stability of its earnings and dividends, the core determining factor of any investment is the potential return. It is precisely here that Chesapeake disappoints, since its valuation is significantly out of step with its favorable, but not favorable enough, prospects. Despite an impressive 6% expected earnings growth rate, the low dividend yield of only 1.5% and significant headwinds driven by the potential for a valuation multiple re-rating led us to expect a poor total return. Shares earn a sell rating.
