Overview & Current Events

Lindsay's Corporation (LNN) provides water management and road infrastructure services in the United States and internationally. The business's Irrigation segment provides irrigation solutions for farmers and contributed 83% of sales in 2021, and the Infrastructure segment helps with road and bridge repairs and contributed 17% of sales in 2021.

On March 21st, 2022, Lindsay reported Q2 2022 results for the period ending February 28th, 2022. The business saw diluted earnings-per-share of $1.32, up 22% from the year-ago period. This strong performance was due to strong performance in the Irrigation business, driven by higher average selling prices in North America, and higher sales volume internationally. The strong performance of the Irrigation business, with a 52% revenue increase, masked the poor performance of the Infrastructure business, which saw revenues decrease 23% compared to the prior-year's quarter.

Agricultural products like corn and soybeans are seeing multi-year price highs; these high prices are likely to lead to an increase in farming production, which will benefit the Irrigation business. Both the Irrigation and Infrastructure businesses benefit from government support payments. For the Irrigation business, the USDA projected net farm income to decrease 4.5% in 2022 due to lower government support payments, even though crop receipts are projected to increase. However, the recent Infrastructure Investments and Jobs Act (IIJA) marks the largest federal investment into infrastructure projects in more than a decade – which should act as a tailwind for the Infrastructure business. The legislation introduced $110 billion in new funding to repair bridges and roads – which the company estimates will lead to increased demand for their transportation safety products. Overall, we think the Irrigation business will benefit from high agriculture prices, and the Infrastructure business will benefit from the new IIJA legislation.

Over the past 9 years, Lindsay has seen earnings-per-share grow at an average annualized rate of 0.4%. In 2022, we expect Lindsay to deliver $5.55 in earnings-per-share driven by high agriculture prices in the Irrigation business and the recent IIJA legislation in the Infrastructure business. We conservatively forecast that earnings-per-share could grow at a modest rate of 3% annually over the next 5 years.

Over the past 5 years, Lindsay's dividend has grown at 2.4% annually. In our model, we forecast that dividends would grow at 1.5% annually over the next 5 years, fueled by earnings-per-share growth. Lindsay Corporation has a track record of 20 years of consecutive dividend increases.

Lindsay Corporation (LNN)

Updated May 19th, 2022, by Thomas Richmond

Over the past 9 years, Lindsay has averaged a 27.5 P/E ratio, and over the past 5 years, Lindsay has averaged a 33.2 P/E ratio. We estimate that a 25 P/E ratio is fair for the business based on past multiples. Today, the stock offers a low 1.1% dividend yield, which is low for investors who prioritize dividend income, but investors might consider the company if they're bullish on agriculture or infrastructure after the new legislation.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2027
Payout	10%	9%	23%	49%	43%	54%	41%	86%	35%	34%	24%	22%

Lindsay has averaged a payout ratio of 38% over the past 9 years. We project that the dividend will be safe since the low payout ratio signifies that the dividend is adequately backed by strong earnings-per-share. Even though the business is in a cyclical industry, Lindsay has a very safe balance sheet, with over $94 million in cash compared to $115 million in total debt. The company's current assets exceed total liabilities, which means that the business has a very low chance of going bankrupt.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Lindsay Corporation offers investors an opportunity to invest in a business that will indirectly benefit from the rising tides of high agricultural prices for the Irrigation side of the business and new government spending on the Infrastructure side of the business. At today's price, we rate the stock as a hold because total return prospects come in at 6.1% annually over the next five years, and the dividend yield is just 1.1%. While this stock might not be attractive for the average investor due to the hold rating and the low dividend, investors might be interested in this stock because the business may benefit indirectly from higher agriculture prices and the recent increase in government infrastructure spending.
