Overview & Current Events

NACCO Industries is a holding company for The North American Coal Corporation, which incorporated in 1913. The company supplies coal from surface mines to power generation companies. NACCO Industries is the largest lignite coal producer in the U.S. and ranks among the top ten of all coal producers. NACCO Industries operates in the states of North Dakota, Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana and on the Navajo Nation in New Mexico. The company produces annual revenues of ~192 million. The company has been very active in purchasing and spinning off a wide variety of businesses in its history. In 1988 and 1990, NACCO Industries made several purchases that expanded the business to include housewares. In 2012, NACCO Industries spun off its Materials Handling Group (a combination of Yale Materials Handling Corporation and the Hyster Company). The company completed its spinoff of its housewares-related business on September 29th, 2017.

On May 4th, 2022, NACCO Industries reported results for the first quarter for the period ending March 31st, 2022. For the quarter, revenue grew 22% to $55 million. The company reported earnings-per-share of $1.72, which compared favorably to $1.25 in the prior year.

Coal revenues fell 4.5% to $21 million due to lower demand. Total tons delivered declined 15.5%. Unconsolidated coal deliveries decreased 15.9% to 6.3 million tons while consolidated coal deliveries declined by 12.3% to 732K tons. Delivers from the North American Mining segment grew nearly 10.2% to nearly 14 million tons while revenues were higher by 19.3% to $21.4 million. The company entered into an agreement in Q2 2020 to become the exclusive contract miner for the Thacker Pass lithium project in northern Nevada. Construction will now begin sometime this year with the production of lithium products to begin in 2023. Mineral Management revenues increased 132% to $12.8 million due to the mineral interest acquired last year as well as the company's Ohio and Louisiana oil and natural gas mineral interests. We maintain our forecast for earnings-per-share of $4.50 for 2022 due to the company's guidance that coal deliveries will decline significantly from 2021 offset by growth in other areas.

Because NACCO Industries spun off its Materials Handling Group in 2012, it is not appropriate to compare today's company to the pre-spinoff equivalent. NACCO saw its earnings per share decline 6.5% per year through 2017. Although NACCO has shown negative growth since 2012 and volatile earnings-per-share since then, we maintain our projected growth of -2% annually as coal demand is expected to decrease in 2022 and the prospects of growth from the Thacker Pass project that are offset by a high starting base for EPS.

NACCO Industries (NC)

Updated May 7th, 2022 by Nathan Parsh

Adjusting for its spin-off history, NACCO Industries has raised its dividend for 36 consecutive years. The company increased its dividend by 2.6% for June 15th, 2021 payment. We expect a dividend growth rate of 5% going forward.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	Now	2027
Avg. P/E	18.4	10.0	13.8	16.8	14.5	18.2	8.7	8.3	12.5	5.4	10.9	9.0
Avg. Yld.	2.0%	1.7%	1.9%	2.0%	1.7%	1.3%	1.8%	1.6%	2.9%	2.2%	1.6%	2.8%

Shares of NACCO Industries have increased $17, or 53%, since our March 4th, 2022 report. Focusing on just the past 5 years, NACCO Industries shares have traded with an average price to earnings multiple of 10.6. This is lower than the stock's current multiple of almost 11x earnings. Investors are just not willing to pay for a company that has an issue growing earnings consistently. NACCO Industries needs to prove it can reliably grow earnings-per-share before it reaches its 5-year historical averages. We maintain our 2027 P/E target of 9. If achieved, this would lower annual returns by 3.7% returns over the next five years.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

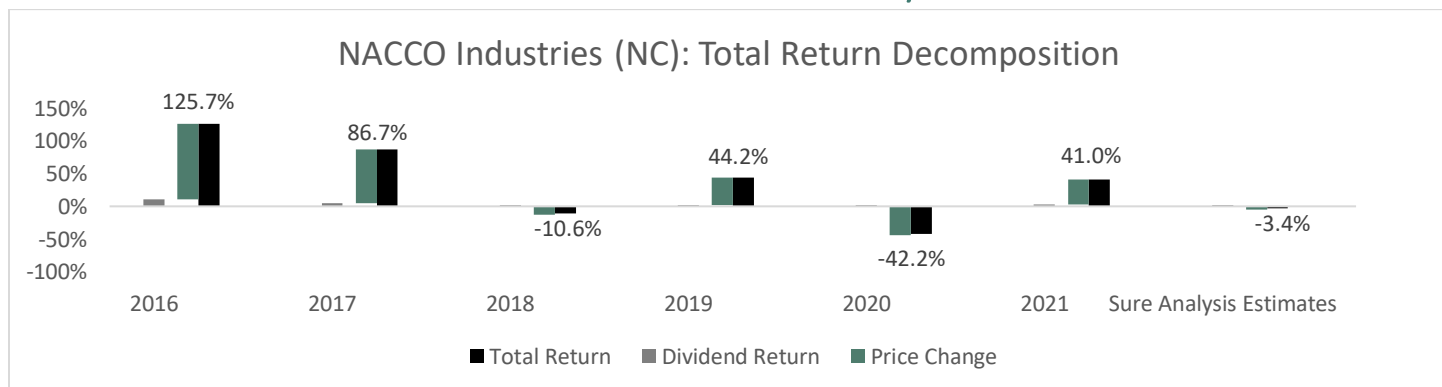

Year	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2027
Payout	38%	17%	26%	34%	25%	24%	13%	13%	37%	12%	18%	25%

The previous version of NACCO Industries actually saw earnings improve during the last recession, but this is not the same company. NACCO Industries now sees a substantial portion of revenues from coal. As demand for coal fluctuates, so will the company's ability to produce revenue. The company has also kept its payout ratio low in recent years, which is a prudent decision by management as earnings-per-share continues to drop. NACCO Industries' primary competitive advantage is that it doesn't acquire existing coal mines or mining companies, as this would increase its leverage position. Instead, NACCO Industries focuses on reducing coal production costs and maximizing efficiency and operating capacity at the mine locations.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Following first quarter results, NACCO Industries is expected to return an annual loss of 3.7% through 2027, down from our previous estimate of 5.2%. This projected return stems from a starting dividend yield of 1.6% that is offset by a low single-digit contribution from multiple expansion and an expected decline in earnings-per-share growth. Coal demand was a headwind during the quarter, but all other areas of the business performed well. That said, shares have increased substantially since our last report and we no longer view NACCO Industries as undervalued. We reiterate our five-year price target of $37, but now rate shares of NACCO Industries as a sell due to projected returns.
