Overview & Current Events

Houlihan Lokey, Inc. (HLI) is a global independent investment bank with expertise in mergers and acquisitions (M&A), capital markets, financial restructurings, and financial and valuation advisory. Founded in 1972, this $5 billion market cap company has raised its dividend for the past 6 years.

Houlihan Lokey, Inc. reported fiscal year 2022 and Q4 2022 financial results on May 12th, 2022. For the quarter earnings-per-share equalled $0.97, lower than the $1.44 the company reported in Q4 2021. The full fiscal year, ended on March 31st, reported $6.41 per share, compared to the $4.55 reported for the 2021 fiscal year. The company has announced the next dividend, which will be $0.53 quarterly, with an ex-dividend date of September 1st, payable on the 15th of September. This dividend is well covered by the company's earnings.

The company's forward revenue will be heavily affected by the reduction in Merger & Acquisition activity going forward, partly as a result of interest rates increasing, and partly as a result of the failure of many of the 2020 and 2021 SPAC mergers causing that type of M&A activity to be less attractive. These factors should result in such business reverting to their historical norms.

HLI is an investment bank, and the bulk of its business is related to consulting and other investment advisory services, rather than the trading that some investment banks engage in. This has benefits and drawbacks, over the past couple of years this focus on advisory services has helped them do well, given the boom of mergers, acquisitions and in particular the SPAC boom of 2020.

On the other hand, now that interest rates are rising, and capital isn't as cheap anymore, this boom as begun to stall out, and that will drag down the company's business going forward. While this isn't by any means a deathblow to the company, it does help characterize the cyclicity of the business, and its prospects in an environment with a hawkish Federal Reserve. For these reasons we expect that over the next 5 years the companies' earnings will shrink at a rate of around 5% per year, and we estimate that its EPS in 2027 will be around $4.64 per share.

Houlihan Lokey, Inc. (HLI)

Updated June 22nd, 2022, by Tiago Dias

HLI has traditionally traded at around 16 times earnings, however with the more hawkish Federal Reserve constraining their activities going forward, we expect that this ratio will remain around its current 13 times earnings until 2027, in line with its worsening fundamentals.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	--	--	--	27%	44%	34%	45%	44%	29%	24%	35%	48%

Houlihan Lokey Inc. is a well-established business with global operations and given its focus on advisory services over the traditional trading that many investment banks engage in, they are well positioned for a drawdown in their business, thanks to their lack of leverage. Indeed, leverage is often the cause of investment bank failures, and HLI is almost entirely insulated from such failure modes.

While it is concerning that macro-economic factors are currently moving against the company, the lack of leverage, long term debt commitments and the highly dynamic business model that HLI is engaging in means that they are well prepared to be able to cut costs and maintain profitability even in a difficult economic environment. Their geographical diversification also gives them some optionality going forward.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

With an unimpressive 2.7% dividend yield, we are forecasting total return loss of 1.4% per annum, driven primarily by a shrinkage of their advisory and M&A business as a result of macro-economic factors and a reversion to the mean. We don't expect their valuation ratios to meaningfully change in the foreseeable future, given the difficult environment they are operating under. As a result, their shares earn a sell rating.
