Overview & Current Events

Martin Marietta Materials is a materials company focused primarily on building and infrastructure products generally sourced from local mines and quarries. Some leading products include cement, asphalt, paving, and concrete. The company has a focus of operations in the South, Texas, and Florida. These regions have generally enjoyed strong demand for building materials in recent years.

The company's core aggregates business faces limited competition and thus can prosper during periods of high demand such as now. The company's specialty chemical business is also enjoying an unusually strong operating environment.

Martin Marietta had posted strong results for most of 2022 as it was able to raise prices aggressively amid strong demand. However, the company reported less favorable Q4 results on February 15th, 2023; the company saw sales slide 1.3% year-over-year to $1.48 billion. This was a bit of a surprise, as Martin Marietta had been posting double-digit revenue growth in prior quarters.

However, the company explained that the revenue shortfall was primarily due to a double-digit decline in aggregate sales. This, in turn, was due to bad weather in a number of key markets. Putting that aside, the company's business showed strength including an impressive 16.5% increase in overall product pricing. Not surprisingly, Martin Marietta is delivering strong profit margins at the moment. The company offered fairly upbeat guidance for 2023, with revenues forecast to rise and pricing set to notch another double-digit increase. Martin Marietta Materials is showing impressive strength despite the rise in interest rates and slowdown in certain construction markets.

Martin Marietta Materials has achieved a strong earnings growth track record over the past decade. It jumpstarted its expansion in 2014 with the $2.7 billion purchase of Texas Industries. This gave the company its foothold in that fast-growing state. Martin Marietta Materials issued a large amount of stock to pay for that deal. Since then, however, it has repurchased some stock to bring its share count back down slightly.

Additionally, while the company had paused its dividend growth in the early 2010s, Martin Marietta Materials started to increase its dividend annually once it began to benefit from the Texas Industries acquisition. Following a small dividend bump in 2016, the company has been giving its shareholders more substantial increases. Over the past five years, it has managed a respectable 7.5% compound annualized dividend growth rate. Earnings growth of more than 11% annualized over the past five years has more than covered those dividend increases. On August 10th, Martin Marietta announced its latest dividend hike, giving shareholders an 8% increase to a new payment of 66 cents per quarter.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	Now	2028
Avg. P/E	37.9	45.0	34.4	26.9	30.2	25.2	23.7	19.7	29.4	24.2	26.3	22.0
Avg. Yld.	1.6%	1.3%	1.1%	0.9%	0.8%	0.9%	0.9%	1.0%	0.7%	0.8%	0.7%	0.9%

Martin Marietta Materials started off the 2010s with a high P/E ratio due to depressed earnings coming out of the 2008 housing bust. Following the Texas Industries acquisition, the company's P/E ratio started to move to more normal levels. While the company's P/E has been highly variable, we project that it will settle around 22 going forward.

Though the company's dividend yield has been as high as 1.6% in the past, the stock has been a growth equity in recent years and has ended up with a correspondingly lower yield. Investors should not expect a current yield much above 1%.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout	60%	59%	38%	25%	24%	23%	21%	19%	19%	21%	19%	20%

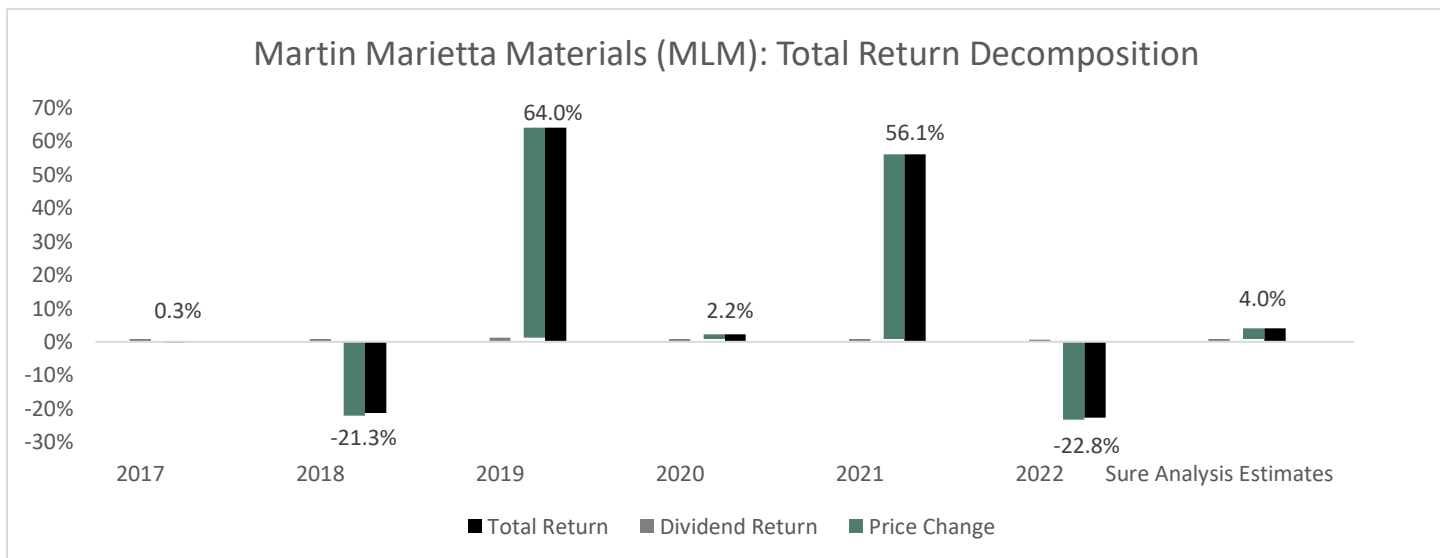

The building materials industry has a spotty track record in terms of consistent earnings growth and strong capital allocation. However, Martin Marietta Materials has historically exceeded its peers by a wide margin. That, combined with its favorable geographic positioning, has given the company a sustainable competitive advantage.

The company has $4.3 billion of long-term debt which is not inconsiderable compared to the size of its asset base. However, little of this debt comes due within the next five years. Meanwhile, the company's consistent earnings and strong interest coverage should keep the company on fine financial footing. The dividend is also safe, as the company has consistently settled on a payout ratio of around 20% in recent years, leaving it well-covered by earnings.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Martin Marietta Materials has done a fine job delivering superior results in what's generally viewed to be a challenging industry. The company's purchases of Texas Industries and other firms have earned agreeable returns on investment. However, we see shares as being significantly over fair value today and anticipate multiple compression offsetting earnings growth in the intermediate term. With a 4% total annualized return forecast, shares earn a hold rating.
