Overview & Current Events

Old Dominion Freight Line, Inc. (ODFL) is one of the largest less-than-truckload (LTL) carriers in North America. Based in Thomasville, NC, it has a market cap of $33.6 billion; its nearly 23,500 employees operate over 250 service centers in 48 states, 11,200 tractors (trucks), and 45,000 trailers. Founded in 1934, its largest competitor in the highly competitive LTL industry is JB Hunt Transport Services Inc.

The company began paying a dividend in 2017 and has raised its payout from $0.27 to $1.40 annually, including a 33.3% increase on February 1st, 2023. However, the dividend yield (currently 0.5%) has been relatively flat because the share price has also risen.

On April 26th, 2023, Old Dominion reported its Q1 results for the quarter ending March 31st, 2023. Total revenue of $1.44 billion was 3.7% lower than in Q1-2022, while diluted earnings per share also fell by 0.8%, from $2.60 to $2.58. The decline in revenues was driven by 11.9% lower LTL (Less Than Truckload) revenue per hundredweight, which was partially offset an 9.2% increase in LTL tons.

Despite the decline in revenues, a great chunk of the company's margins improved by further leveraging scaling economics. Specifically, the company also continued to operate with great efficiency during the quarter and maintained its disciplined control over discretionary spending. As a result, ODFL improved both its direct operating costs and total overhead costs as a percent of revenue during the quarter. ODFL's salaries, wages, and benefit costs as a percent of revenue improved to 45.2% from 45.4% last year. Its purchased transportation costs also improved by 240 basis points to 2.1% of revenue. Unfortunately, a significant increase in operating supplies that primarily resulted from the significant increase in the cost of diesel fuel and other petroleum-based products during the quarter mostly offset these gains. Hence, the operating income margin fell 50 basis points to 26.6%. This was the main driver behind the slight EPS decline.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
EPS	$1.59	$2.07	$2.38	$2.37	$2.91	$4.92	$5.11	$5.68	$8.89	$12.18	$12.20	$21.50
DPS	---	---	---	---	$0.27	$0.35	$0.45	$0.60	$0.80	$1.20	$1.60	$4.88
Shares	129	129	127	124	124	122	120	117	116	111	110.0	105.0

The company expects continued growth along the lines of what it saw in 2022, with customer demand expected to be about the same. Much of its current momentum comes from e-commerce deliveries. Over the past five years, earnings-per-share has risen by an average of 33.2% per year. Earnings-per-share has also been getting a boost from share buybacks since 2015, with the company spending $1.3 billion on repurchases in 2022. From 2014 to Q1-2023, ODFL reduced its share count from 129 million to 110 million, a -14.7% reduction. We are forecasting $12.20 in earnings-per-share for 2023 to go along with a 12% annual growth rate as the company continues to invest heavily in growing the business and cutting costs without sacrificing service quality.

Old Dominion's on-time service was sustained at 99% in Q1-2023, while at the same time, its cargo claims ratio in Q1 was as low as 0.1%. On pricing, it takes a long-term approach aimed at offsetting cost inflation and new investments. As well as service centers and trucks, it invests in IT and employee wages/benefits (none of its employees are unionized).

Old Dominion Freight Line, Inc. (ODFL)

Updated April 27th, 2023, by Nikolaos Sismanis

In the past five years, the dividend has increased by an average of 35.5% per year, including this year when it went up by 33.3% (from $1.20 to $1.40). We estimate slower, but still significant average annual growth of 25%, as the company works toward a normalized payout ratio. At that rate, the 2028 dividend would amount to $4.88, and the expected payout ratio would be 23%.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2022	2028
Avg. P/E	17.9	20.7	19.4	19.2	22.7	19.4	20.8	29.6	30.5	25.9	25.0	22.0
Avg. Yld.	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.4%	0.4%	0.4%	0.4%	0.4%	0.4%	0.5%	1.0%

Old Dominion has traded with an average P/E ratio of about 22-23 times earnings over the last decade, which is what we are using for a fair value estimate. With shares presently trading hands at 25 times expected earnings, this implies the possibility for a noteworthy valuation headwind ahead. While the dividend yield is quite low, it has the propensity to grow substantially over time. This is due to the potential for dividend growth to surpass earnings growth through 2028.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout	---	---	---	---	9%	7%	9%	11%	9%	10%	13%	23%

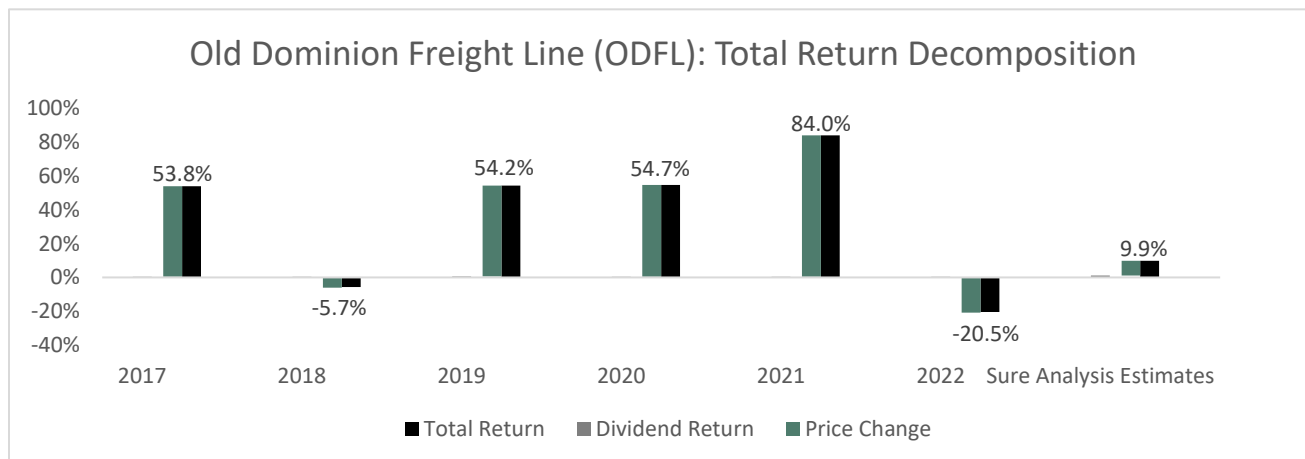

Old Dominion argues its competitive advantage lies in being able to deliver superior service at a fair price. The company is reasonably recession resistant. Despite the sharp economic downturn in 2020, its revenue was roughly flat, but its EPS and cash flow per share were up by high single digits. In the 2008 through 2010 period Old Dominion posted earnings-per-share of $0.55, $0.28, and $0.60.

Debt is not a concern, as Old Dominion has only $80 million in long-term debt, none of which is due in the next five years. Long-term interest is about $1 million per year, and the interest coverage ratio is incredibly high.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Due to both internal and external factors, Old Dominion is a powerful company and one of the leading LTL carriers in the U.S. Internally, it has invested in new growth, and externally, it has benefited from the e-commerce revolution. It is financially sound and profitable, throwing off cash flow that allows it to keep investing in the business and growing its dividend. Total expected returns come in at 9.9% per annum, driven by a 12% anticipated growth rate and 0.5% dividend yield, offset by the potential for a 2.6% annual valuation headwind. Shares earn a buy rating.
