Overview & Current Events

Avista Corp. (AVA) is an electric and natural gas utility operating primarily in the states of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, and Alaska. In addition to its regulated utility business, the company also operates other businesses, including venture funds, real estate investments, and other investments. Founded in 1889, this $3.1 billion market cap company has raised its dividend every year for the past 20 years.

Avista reported Q1 2023 earnings on May 3rd, 2022. For the quarter, the company reported EPS of $0.73, compared to the $0.99 earnings per share the company reported in the same period in 2022. Avista declared a $0.46 dividend payable to shareholders in June. The company confirmed its 2023 earnings guidance at a range between $2.27 - $2.47 per share, though the management team warned that due to how the company's tax provision is spread throughout the year, the quarterly earnings will differ from recent history. The Washington settlement has already been approved in December, and a new multi-year rate plan has been filed with the Idaho regulator.

The company continues to make progress towards its clean energy goals, and with the new wind generation contract in Montana, more than 70% of Avistas peak generating capability will be produced from non-emitting resources in 2026.

Utility companies are often seen as stable businesses with low volatility in their dividends, at the expense of limited growth opportunities. Avista Corp. is no different from its peers, and its dividend has steadily and slowly grown over the past decade. Unfortunately, this stability has also come at a great cost, and its revenue has been flat over this period, with earnings growth coming primarily from increased margins.

As a mature company in a mature industry, we don't expect this situation to change, and while the rate increases that are currently being negotiated may bump up the revenue a little bit, we expect that much of those increased revenues will be balanced out by higher costs, both in commodities and in labor. Additionally, environmental concerns will likely continue to add downward pressure in terms of overall electricity and natural gas consumption, and the company will also continue to issue shares which will also depress earnings per share.

For these reasons we estimate only 3% annual growth over the next 5 years, and estimate earnings of $2.63 per share in 2028, with a dividend per share of $2.13. This is a more conservative estimate than the company's own expectations, but one that we believe is more in line with the company's historical norms and prospects.

Avista Corp. (AVA)

Updated February 26th, 2023, by Tiago Dias

Avista has traded hands with an average P/E ratio of about 19 times earnings in the last decade. While it's possible that this premium will continue to be paid, such a situation would not be justified by the company's fundamentals, and as such we expect the company's valuation to be re-rated to the lower end of its historical range by 2028.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout	66%	69%	70%	64%	73%	72%	52%	85%	80%	83%	81%	81%

The core competitive advantage is also the thing that prevented its revenue growth over the past decade, Avista is a regulated utility. Regulated utilities receive government backed monopolies, and as such they don't have to worry about any new competition coming in and disrupting their business. At the same time, however, the stringent regulations they operate under make it difficult to grow the business, and operate it in an efficient manner, and any price increases are subject to political pressures.

So far, the company has been successful in its settlements with regulators, and there is every expectation that the ongoing rate plans that are being negotiated will also be successful, but such things always introduce additional risks that investors should be aware of.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Despite an attractive 4.5% dividend yield, we are forecasting total return potential of just 3.9% per annum, driven by the yield and 3% growth, offset by the possibility of a notable valuation headwind. As a result, the shares earn a hold rating.
