Overview & Current Events

Tenaris SA is a global manufacturer of steel pipes and related services that is headquartered in Luxembourg and is a majority-owned subsidiary of the Techint Group. Tenaris has significant exposure to oil prices as the majority of its customers operate in the energy sector. Its common stock is traded on three international stock exchanges, but U.S. investors can initiate a stake in the business through ADR shares. The company could produce about $14.5 billion in revenue this year, and currently has a market capitalization of $16.2 billion.

Tenaris reported first quarter earnings on April 26th, 2023, and results were better than expected on both the top and bottom lines, and by wide margins. Adjusted earnings-per-share came to $1.91, which was 28 cents ahead of expectations. Revenue soared 75% year-over-year to $4.14 billion, and was better than estimates by $270 million.

The company noted shipments reached the highest level in 15 years, and was due to increases in sales of OCTG and line pipe for offshore projects. Strength was seen in all geographies, and the lone exception to this strong growth was shale operations in North America.

EBITDA was a new record, and free cash flow was up to $804 million, as inventories stabilized and working capital was reduced to 124 days, down from 141 days prior. The company ended the quarter with $1.74 billion in net cash.

Cash from operations was $921 million, almost double from the year-ago period. Capex was $117 million in Q1, up from $67 million in last year's Q1.

We see $6 in earnings-per-share for this year after a good start to 2023.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Tenaris' growth over the last decade has been far from constant, but this is largely due to the prolonged downturn in oil prices that began in 2014. Since the majority of Tenaris' customers operate within the energy sector, this reduces demand for its products and services and causes a decline in its aggregate sales.

Last year saw a strong rebound in Tenaris' earnings capacity. However, oil prices remain a key risk for Tenaris; much lower oil and gas prices significantly impaired the company's ability to produce earnings in 2020. Tenaris is beholden to capital expenditures of oil and gas producers, which generally decline when oil prices remain low for long periods of time. Our estimate of intermediate-term growth is -8%. The sharp recovery in energy prices, specifically for oil, have driven strong demand recovery for Tenaris as its customers invest more heavily in their own operations. We think the recovery in earnings will peak in 2023 given this development, and that it will be very difficult for Tenaris to grow from this year's very high earnings base.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	Now	2028
Avg. P/E	16.6	18.5	25.2	---	40.3	22.6	19.3	64.1	11.1	7.9	4.5	13.0
Avg. Yld.	2.0%	2.1%	3.3%	3.4%	2.6%	2.5%	3.4%	1.0%	2.6%	2.6%	2.5%	1.3%

Tenaris has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio (P/E) of ~17 over the last decade, if we exclude the years in which its P/E ratio was artificially elevated due to depressed earnings caused by the decline in oil prices. We use 13 times earnings as our estimate of fair value given that Tenaris appears to be well on the way to recovery. Today, shares trade for just 4.5 times our earnings estimate of $6.00, which means we expect a hugely positive impact from the valuation if the multiple were to revert to our fair value P/E estimate of 13 over time.

For income investors, we note that the country of Luxembourg imposes a 15% withholding tax on Tenaris' dividend payments. We expect the payout to remain at roughly 20% of earnings by 2028, with the annualized dividend at $0.68 per share currently. We note that Tenaris' unusual dividend policy is very difficult to forecast.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout	33%	40%	83%	600%	107%	55%	65%	64%	28%	20%	11%	17%

Tenaris recently boosted its dividend on bumper earnings. We see the dividend outlook as murky at the moment, and Tenaris' dividend policy is quite variable.

Qualitatively, Tenaris' most compelling competitive advantage is its entrenched position in a technical segment of the energy sector that relies tremendously on strong customer-supplier relationships. As a large company with global operations, Tenaris' services are unlikely to be replaced by newer, smaller industry disruptors. Its leverage to the oil and gas markets has been both a blessing and a curse in recent years. Tenaris is not susceptible to recessions so much as oil prices, so investors should focus on the latter, not the former, when assessing safety.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

We see Tenaris as having the pieces in place to continue to recover, and some of that progress is being seen in results already. With 15.2% total return prospects, we rate Tenaris as a buy, and note that investors are taking on inherent oil price risk by owning shares. The valuation is low today, but we see that as the result of what should be a long-term peak in earnings in 2023. We find the outlook for growth from here to be difficult. We see -8% growth, a 23.6% tailwind from the valuation, and 2.5% yield driving total returns.
