Overview & Current Events

Silgan Holdings manufactures and sells metal and plastic containers, as well as packaging closures. Its containers are found in everyday food consumables such as pet food, fruits and vegetables, and drinks, while its closures are applied to the beverage, garden, and personal care products. The company generates nearly $5.5 billion in revenues and is based in Stamford, Connecticut.

On July 26th, 2023, Silgan reported its Q2 results for the period ending June 30th, 2023. Quarterly revenues fell 8% year-over-year to $1.43 billion. Specifically, the metal containers segment's sales fell 6% to $710.8 million due to 4% lower sales volumes and the impact of Russia. The dispensing & specialty closures segment also posted soft results, with its sales falling by 7% year-over-year to $560.1 million. This decline was primarily the result of a lower unit volume/mix of approximately 6%. Note that 65% of this decline was the result of lower food and beverage closures volumes in Europe. Finally, custom containers posted a 17% revenue decline to $155.8 million, driven by a 14% decline in sales volumes and slightly lower pricing. The reason for the decrease in sales volumes was that certain clients did not renew their contracts. Adjusted EPS came in at $0.83, which was notably below Q2-2022's $1.09. For FY2023, Silgan revised its outlook lower, expecting adjusted EPS to land between $3.40 and $3.60 (down from $3.95 and $4.15 previously). We have utilized the midpoint of this range in our estimates.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028

DPS	$0.28	$0.30	$0.32	$0.34	$0.36	$0.40	$0.44	$0.48	$0.56	$0.64	$0.72	$1.16

Over the past decade, Silgan has averaged an EPS and DPS CAGR of 8.9% and 9.6%, respectively. Despite the work-from-home economy gradually fading, demand for packaged and canned foods, as well as sanitization products, should remain relatively stable over the long term. Nevertheless, we retain our EPS CAGR estimate at 6% to price in the scenario of softer demand for containers during a potential economic slowdown. A possible decline in volumes caused by an oversupply of Silgan's products could also slow down growth, as already somewhat evident in the company's Q2 results. Nevertheless, we retain our DPS CAGR forecast at 10% to reflect management's latest bold payout hike and low payout ratio that should afford meaningful payout increases. Silgan has grown its DPS annually for 19 consecutive years.

Silgan Holdings (SLGN)

Updated July 26th, 2023 by Nikolaos Sismanis

Silgan's valuation has remained relatively reasonable over the years, rarely outrunning its underlying financial growth. With shares declining notably following management's revised guidance, shares appear relatively cheaply priced at 12.2 times their FY2023 expected adjusted EPS. We retain our fair P/E ratio at 13 moving forward. The stock's yield has always remained relatively low, at around 1% to 2%. Despite the rapid dividend increases, aggregate dividends paid out (as well as buybacks) have remained quite humble as the company reinvests most of its proceeds back into the business.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout	19%	21%	23%	27%	15%	20%	25%	17%	17%	21%	21%	25%

Investors can rely on Silgan's dividends since the company's payout ratio has historically remained quite low. It currently stands at 16%. Since the company's IPO in 1996, Silgan has never reported a money-losing quarter. Its products are vital for various consumer staples. Hence, its operations are quite stable, displayed in its 18-year dividend growth record. At the same time, however, Silgan operates in a massively competitive space, with quite thin margins. The company's competitors include firms that are multiple times larger than Silgan, such as the Ball Corp. (BLL), the Packaging Corporation of America (PKG), keeping Silgan's net profit margins in the mid-single-digits.

Overall, we believe that the company has showcased decades of robust cash flow generation, with little volatility to its financials. Its operations should remain relatively stable even under adverse economic conditions. Silgan's financial resiliency is evident by the 2026 senior secured notes issue in the midst of the pandemic, in which Silgan managed to secure $500 million at an ultra-low rate of 1.4%.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Silgan has a long history of stable returns, lacking any wild fluctuations in its share price throughout the decades. Combining our relatively modest growth expectations, the dividend yield, and the potential for a valuation expansion towards its average, we estimate annualized returns of around 9.1% in the medium-term. Hence, we rate shares a hold. Regardless, we remind investors that they must be aware of the company's razor-thin net income margins, which could easily be compressed following incompetence in passing inflationary costs through. Failure to do so could impact future returns. The pass-through of costs to Silgan's product pricing has been managed well thus far, nonetheless.
