Overview & Current Events

Aegon NV is a financial holding company based in the Netherlands. The company provides a wide range of financial services to clients, including insurance, pensions, and asset management. Aegon has five core operating segments: Americas, Europe, Asia, Asset Management Holding and Other Activities. The firm's most widely recognized brand is Transamerica, which Aegon acquired in 1999. United States investors can initiate a position in Aegon through American Depositary Receipts that trade on the New York Stock Exchange under the ticker AEG with a market cap of $9.4 billion. In mid-August, Aegon reported (8/17/23) financial results for the first half of fiscal 2023. Its operating capital grew 13% over the prior year's period thanks to business growth and improved claims experience. Adjusted operating income edged up 3% thanks to sales growth in U.S. Strategic Assets, U.K. Workplace business and life insurance divisions in China and Brazil. The company remains on track to deliver €400 million of expense savings (compared to 2019) by the end of this year. However, due to cash outflows caused by reduced investor confidence, Aegon posted a loss per share of -$0.11. Management reiterated that it is taking actions to reduce the volatility in business performance, but we believe Aegon has a long way to go to achieve this. Aegon cut its annual dividend by -79% in 2020, from $0.33 to $0.07, due to the pandemic. Investors should be aware of the sensitivity of the company to recessions.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Aegon has a poor performance record, as it has not generated consistent earnings growth over full economic cycles. In addition, the company is currently facing a headwind due to highly volatile financial markets, which have led investors to reduce their transactions. As a result, Aegon has been receiving lower transaction fees in recent quarters. Nevertheless, due to the low comparison base formed this year, we expect 12% earnings-per-share growth beyond this year.

Aegon declares a separate dividend each year depending on the firm's financial performance. The impact of this dividend policy can be seen in 2008-2010, when the company failed to declare dividends. Moreover, Aegon only pays its dividend twice per year, and its dividends are declared and paid in Euros (which introduces some foreign exchange risk). Accordingly, the firm is not an attractive security for investors looking to generate a consistent dividend income stream from their investment portfolios. The Netherlands imposes a dividend withholding tax of 15% on foreigners who choose to receive their dividends in cash but we have not included the effects of the dividend withholding tax in our analysis.

Aegon's historical valuation has been volatile as its fundamental performance has fluctuated tremendously. The stock is currently trading at a price-to-earnings ratio of 14.6. We assume a fair price-to-earnings ratio of 8.0 for Aegon. If the stock reaches a price-to-earnings ratio of 8.0 over the next five years, it will incur an -11.3% annualized valuation drag.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout	48%	69%	225%	153%	35%	32%	37%	233%	17.9%	22.1%	80.0%	50.1%

Aegon faces intense competition and has a remarkably volatile performance record. It is thus evident that the company lacks a meaningful competitive advantage. The currency swings introduce additional volatility to the earnings and the dividends of the company for U.S. investors. Moreover, Aegon proved vulnerable to the pandemic. The dividend cut in 2020 and the absence of dividends in 2009-2010 are harsh reminders of the vulnerability of Aegon to recessions.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Aegon could offer a 4.7% average annual return over the next five years thanks to 12.0% earnings growth and its 5.5% dividend, partly offset by an -11.3% valuation headwind. However, it has a volatile performance record, and its stock price is much more volatile than the broad market. The stock receives a hold rating for risk aware investors, who can stomach wild stock price swings. The steep rally of the stock after the bottom of the pandemic is a clear signal of the upside potential in the event of sustained global economic growth, but it also reflects the vulnerability of Aegon to downturns.
