Overview & Current Events

Apollo Global is an alternative asset manager that was founded in 1990 and went public in 2011. The company takes investment capital and puts it to work wherever it sees opportunity, including in credit, private equity, and buyouts of companies. Assets under management have grown by more than five times in the past decade and sit at ~$600 billion today. Apollo has about 2,500 employees and the stock trades with a market capitalization of $46 billion.

Apollo posted second quarter earnings on August 3rd, 2023, and results were better than expected on both the top and bottom lines. Revenue was up 500% year-over-year but Apollo's revenue is very lumpy given how it recognizes revenue through divestitures. More importantly, adjusted earnings-per-share came to $1.70, beating estimates by a nickel.

Normalized SRE was $874 million, which is a record. That was driven by record organic inflows and strong margins in its portfolio. Total assets under management came to $617 billion, which was due primarily to $35 billion in inflows during the quarter.

The company originated debt of $23 billion in Q2. Apollo also noted a rebound in investor interest in deploying capital with the firm. Fee revenue was near a record as well, with significant contribution from yield-oriented investment activity, highlighting the company's platform strength.

We now see $6.75 in earnings-per-share for this year after terrific Q2 results. If achieved, that would be a record level of earnings for the company.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028

Apollo's volatile earnings-per-share history is to be expected. Due to the complexity and variability of Apollo's investment strategy, returns are very lumpy. We see earnings growth from here at 12% annually.

Apollo continues to grow its assets under management, which then allows it to grow its investment portfolio. This will be the primary source of returns moving forward as Apollo has more capital to enter into new investments. When Apollo enters and exits its stakes in these investments is critical for earnings, but these events cannot be forecast ahead of time, and thus results in volatility in earnings. For this reason, Apollo shares are not for the risk-averse investor. Apollo's dry powder is measured in tens of billions of dollars, so we see this as a potential tailwind for growth when this money is eventually deployed, particularly if deployments are made at favorable prices. We note the company hasn't been aggressively deploying capital up to this point, and it continues to attract billions of dollars of net inflows.

Apollo's dividend is important, currently yielding 2.1%. This yield is lower than it has been for substantially all the time the company has been public, so on this measure, the stock appears overvalued. Apollo's dividend is also irregular in that the company distributes what it can based upon earnings. The payout has seen a very wide range in the past several years due to this, and the dividend is therefore also difficult to forecast. Apollo's dividend is variable and based upon earnings, so cuts aren't unusual. However, we note the annualized yield is now extremely low based upon the company's history.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	Now	2028
Avg. P/E	5.5	18.9	21.4	7.2	7.6	---	12.3	---	13.0	12.2	12.1	10.0
Avg. Yld.	15.1%	11.6%	9.6%	7.4%	6.8%	6.0%	5.8%	5.1%	3.5%	2.5%	2.1%	1.8%

Apollo has traded as high as 21 times earnings but is down to 12.1 today. We see fair value at 10 times earnings, implying a headwind from valuation contraction if this were to come to fruition. We see the yield remaining about where it is today, but we reiterate that Apollo's variable dividend makes it challenging to forecast.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	82%	219%	204%	53%	52%	---	75%	---	46%	31%	26%	19%

Apollo's dividend policy is to pay out most of the company's earnings to shareholders but note that the company's irregular dividend policy means any particular year may have a very high or very low payout ratio. Volatility in the payout isn't ideal for income investors, so some caution is warranted. Apollo raised the payout for May 2023, but as we mentioned, that does not mean that level will be maintained.

Apollo held up extremely well during the 2020 recession, and we see it as well positioned coming out of it and into a recovery. Its competitive advantage is in its world-class leadership team that has years of experience in successful investment management, and its ability to continue to raise capital.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

We forecast total annual returns of 9.5% in the years to come, consisting of the 2.1% yield, 12% earnings growth and a 3.8% headwind from the valuation. Apollo is certainly not for the risk-averse investor, and we see the growth as driving strong potential returns. The dividend yield is quite low based upon the company's historical yields, but shares earn a hold rating given the big move up in the stock since our last report.
