Overview & Current Events

Founded in 1837 and headquartered in Cincinnati, Ohio, Procter & Gamble is a consumer products giant that sells its products in over 180 countries. Notable brands include Pampers, Luvs, Tide, Gain, Bounty, Charmin, Puffs, Gillette, Head & Shoulders, Old Spice, Dawn, Febreze, Swiffer, Crest, Oral-B, Scope, Olay and many more. The $367 billion market capitalization company generated $82 billion in sales in fiscal 2023. Procter & Gamble has paid a dividend for 133 years and has grown its dividend for 67 consecutive years – one of the longest active streaks of any company.

On April 11th, 2023, Procter & Gamble raised its dividend by 3.0%, from $0.9133 per quarter to $0.9407.

In late July, Procter & Gamble reported (7/28/23) financial results for the fourth quarter of fiscal 2023 (its fiscal year ends June 30th). It grew its sales and its organic sales by 5% and 8%, respectively, over last year's quarter. Organic sales growth resulted from 7% price hikes and a favorable product mix. Despite the headwind of high cost inflation, earnings-per-share grew 13% thanks to price hikes. The firm sales amid strong price hikes are a testament to the strength of the brands of Procter & Gamble. The company provided positive guidance for fiscal 2024, expecting 4%-5% sales growth and 6%-9% growth of earnings-per-share. Given the solid business momentum and the tendency of management to issue somewhat cautious guidance, we expect earnings-per-share of $6.40, near the high end of the guidance. Procter & Gamble has beaten analysts' estimates in 21 of the last 23 quarters.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2029
EPS	$4.22	$4.02	$3.67	$3.92	$4.22	$4.52	$5.12	$5.66	$5.81	$5.90	$6.40	$8.17

Procter & Gamble has grown its earnings-per-share by 3.8% per year on average over the last decade. Sales have remained nearly flat over this period, but net profit margin has increased. The company has been going through a major transformation in recent years. It has sold a significant number of low-margin, low-growth brands and has reduced its brand count from ~170 to 65. This transformation has weighed on the top line, but it should allow Procter & Gamble to focus on its strongest, most profitable brands moving forward. Indeed, the company has returned to solid growth mode in the last six years. Inflationary pressures have increased since early last year, but over time Procter & Gamble has proven capable of sustaining price hikes to offset this headwind thanks to its strong brands. Overall, we expect 5% average annual growth of earnings-per-share, somewhat higher than the 10-year average growth rate.

Procter & Gamble Co. (PG)

Updated August 16th, 2023, by Aristofanis Papadatos

Procter & Gamble has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio of approximately 22.2 over the last decade. We assume a fair earnings multiple of 20.0, taking into consideration the high quality of the company, weighed against modest growth prospects. The stock is currently trading at a nearly 10-year high price-to-earnings ratio of 24.2. If it reaches our fair valuation level over the next five years, it will incur a -3.8% annualized drag in its returns.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	58%	64%	72%	69%	66%	64%	59%	57%	61%	62%	59%	57%

Procter & Gamble's dividend payout ratio has oscillated between 50% and 75% in the last decade, with the current mark at 59%. This is somewhat high for your typical company, but well within a reasonable range for such a high-quality firm. We believe that the company can keep growing its dividend at a rate roughly in line with earnings-per-share growth going forward.

Procter & Gamble has significant competitive advantages thanks to its strong brands. The company has several category-leading brands such as Crest, Tide, Gillette, Bounty, Febreze, Old Spice, Pampers, and many more. These brands provide Procter & Gamble with pricing power and consistent profits, in good times or bad. During the Great Recession, the company posted earnings-per-share of $3.04, $3.64, $3.58, $3.53, and $3.93 in the 2007 through 2011 stretch, while the dividend kept on rising. Moreover, during the COVID-19 pandemic, Procter & Gamble has proven resilient once again, with record earnings in each of the last four years.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Procter & Gamble has demonstrated strong performance in all environments, with an impressive operating history. While its growth rate slowed in the last decade, Procter & Gamble has now completed an important transformation program, which has enhanced growth. However, the stock is trading at a rich valuation level and hence it could offer just a 3.6% average annual return over the next five years, as its 5.0% growth and its 2.4% dividend may be partly offset by a -3.8% valuation headwind. Procter & Gamble is appealing to risk-averse investors who seek reliable dividend growth. However, due to its rich valuation, the stock receives a hold rating.
