Overview & Current Events

Snap-On Inc. was founded in the early 1920's and since that time, has grown from a fledgling direct sales distributor of sockets to a full-service, global distributor of a wide array of common and specialty tools, diagnostics equipment, repair information and system solutions instruments. Snap-On also operates a financial services business that finances its customers' purchases in-house. The company's market capitalization is $13.4 billion, and it should generate around $4.7 billion in revenue this year.

Snap-On posted third quarter earnings on October 19th, 2023, and results were better than expected on both the top and bottom lines. Earnings-per-share came to $4.51, which was seven cents ahead of expectations. Revenue was up 5.2% year-over-year to $1.16 billion, which was $20 million ahead of estimates. Net sales reflected a 4.7% organic revenue increase, as well as $4.4 million in forex translation.

Management said it expects continuing advances in sales and margins, and by extension, earnings, in the coming quarters as it continues to execute well. Management said conditions were changing in its markets but that it has been able to adapt quickly and effectively.

We now see $18.65 in earnings-per-share for this year after a good Q3 report, and encouraging commentary from management.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028

Except for 2020, Snap-On has produced materially higher earnings every year in the past decade. The company's constant focus on acquisitions, as well as its own organic revenue growth in concert with a rapidly growing financial services business, has created a growth profile that is tough to rival. The company continues to buy back its stock as well, albeit in small amounts, providing another tailwind for earnings-per-share. Indeed, it has managed to compound earnings at an average rate of 12% annually in the past decade.

However, we are forecasting a 2% annual growth rate going forward as Snap-On grapples with its already-sizable scale, making further revenue and margin growth more difficult. We note that the company returned to growth from the pandemic slowdown more quickly than anticipated, however, and it appears Snap-On may be back on its prior trajectory from before the pandemic.

The dividend should keep increasing at high rates as the payout ratio is still low. Snap-On produces more cash than it can use to profitably invest in the business, so shareholders should see the benefit. Indeed, the company raised its dividend by 14% for the December 2022 payout, similar to 2019, 2020 and 2021.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	Now	2028
Avg. P/E	15.6	16.8	19.1	17.1	16.3	13.7	12.9	12.7	14.6	13.6	13.6	14.0
Avg. Yld.	1.7%	1.5%	1.4%	1.6%	1.8%	2.1%	2.5%	3.0%	2.3%	2.6%	2.6%	3.0%

Snap-On's price-to-earnings multiple spent several years in the mid-teens, but in recent years, has been more like 13. Today, shares trade for 13.6 times 2023 earnings, and we reiterate our estimate of fair value at 14 times earnings. This implies a small tailwind to total returns in the coming years.

We see the yield rising to the 3% area given Snap-On's impressive dividend growth. When coupled with its decent current yield, Snap-On is a nice choice for dividend growth investors, as well as income investors.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout	26%	26%	27%	27%	28%	29%	32%	38%	34%	35%	35%	42%

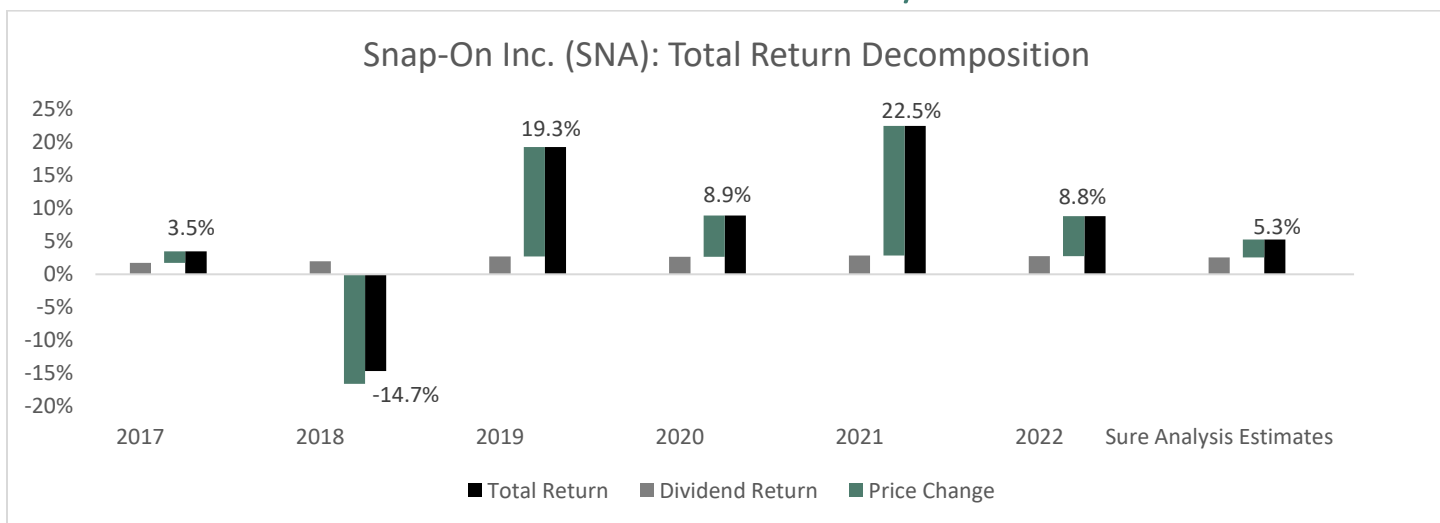

The payout ratio is still relatively low and should remain that way unless management decides to ramp up its dividend growth strategy, which we view as unlikely at this point given already-strong growth rates. We see the recent pace of dividend increases continuing, and therefore driving the payout ratio higher than it is today over time. However, we see no risk of Snap-On being able to afford its dividend at any time, even with high rates of dividend increases.

Snap-On's main competitive advantage is in its very broad and deep assortment of all kinds of specialty tools. In addition, its global reach and in-house financing is a unique combination not found elsewhere. The financing business could pose a problem during a recession as customers may become past due on their accounts, so this would be the principal risk for Snap-On during the next economic downturn. Earnings suffered during the Great Recession.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Snap-On's recent price action has it still slightly undervalued. We now forecast total annual return potential of 5.3% going forward, consisting of the 2.6% current yield, 2% earnings growth, and a fractional tailwind from the valuation. We continue to like Snap-On's fundamentals, and we reiterate the stock at a hold rating, noting total return prospects are still fairly low.
