Overview & Current Events

OneMain Holdings is a specialty finance company which provides personal loans to consumers. It came about as a spinout from Citigroup's financial services division. OneMain has focused on providing services to clients with lower credit scores and has products such as the BrightWay credit card which reward holders for consistent on-time payments. Investors often lump these types of businesses together as "subprime" lending but OneMain's average customer has a FICO score in the low 600s, which is quite a bit higher in quality than several of its peers.

OneMain offers its services through its branch network of more than 1,400 locations along with its digital affiliates. It currently has more than 2.5 million customer accounts and a loans receivable book of $21.9 billion. The company faces significant competition from other specialty personal lenders such as World Acceptance. However, OneMain has invested more quickly than rivals in online originations and in sophisticated data analysis while centralizing loan underwriting operations. It also has advertised heavily in credit coaching services, online credit aggregators and other non-traditional venues which have boosted visibility. This has allowed OneMain to grow quickly, especially since 2020 thanks to pandemic-driven disruptions in traditional loan distribution channels.

On October 25th, 2023, OneMain reported its Q3 2023 results. Earnings of $1.61 per share rose from $1.49 from the same period of the prior year and topped expectations. Revenues of $1.09 billion grew 1.9% year-over-year. Earnings improved as the company saw its charge-off ratio improve notably from the prior quarter. A higher volume of outstanding loans also helped boost income. However, OneMain's credit delinquency ratios are edging higher, suggesting that the company may see additional charge-offs in 2024. Overall, OneMain has delivered fine credit performance given the broader headwinds that the economy is facing and it appears to be managing risk adequately.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
EPS		$0.28	-$1.89	$1.59	$1.35	$3.29	$6.27	$5.41	$9.87	$7.06	$5.64	$5.93
DPS		---	---	---	---	---	$1.00	$1.44	$2.55	$3.80	$4.00	$4.42
Shares		115	134	135	135	136	136	134	128	124	122	118

OneMain completed its IPO in late 2013. It started off as a much smaller and only marginally profitable lender in its first couple of years as a standalone company. However, it has grown tremendously since IPO, with revenues soaring from $1.2 billion in 2014 to $3.5 billion in 2022. OneMain has turned the revenue growth into strong profit growth as well. OneMain arguably earned excess profit in 2021 thanks to excellent credit conditions the economy enjoyed due to pandemic-related government assistance. However, earnings now appear to be stabilizing around pre-pandemic levels. It appears OneMain has already grabbed much of the available market share for its specialty loan products. To grow further, it will likely require competing more aggressively with its direct peers.

Perhaps in a nod to its diminishing growth prospects, OneMain has increased capital returns. OneMain has given investors dramatic dividend increases in recent years while also repurchasing large quantities of stock.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	Now	2028
Avg. P/E		---	---	17.0	19.1	9.6	5.7	5.9	5.6	4.6	6.6	5.5
Avg. Yld.		---	---	---	---	---	2.8%	4.5%	4.7%	9.5%	10.8%	13.5%

OneMain has settled at a mid-single-digits P/E ratio over the past five years. The market appears to have a high degree of skepticism as to the quality and persistence of OneMain's earnings stream. Given the negative associations around high-yield specialty lending, we expect the firm's P/E ratio to remain at low levels.

OneMain's dividend yield has grown tremendously in recent years as the firm has increased its dividend repeatedly while its share price has not followed suit.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028
Payout		---	---	---	---	---	16%	27%	26%	54%	71%	75%

OneMain has been collecting data and building its proprietary information technology system since it was still a part of Citigroup. The company has far more experience dealing with recessions, such as the 2001 downturn and 2008 financial crisis, than its peers. This sets OneMain apart from much of the lending crowd which often relies more on predictive algorithms than historical data and analysis. OneMain also operates in nearly all the U.S. states and has diversification across its loan book so that a financial crisis in one state or economic sector would not overly impact the company.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Investors are understandably nervous about the outlook for personal lenders given spiking interest rates and the possibility of a recession. However, OneMain seems well-positioned for an economic downturn. Its strong balance sheet and stress-tested risk management systems should allow it to manage losses during a period of economic weakness. If anything, recessions often lead to consolidation in the personal lending industry, which could bolster OneMain's competitive position. There are risks here due to the business model and current macroeconomic environment. Shares have a 7.8% total return outlook and earn a hold rating as current overvaluation offsets the high starting yield.
