Overview & Current Events

Regency Centers Corporation is a fully integrated real estate investment trust specializing in retail locations whose tenants include highly productive grocers, restaurants, service providers, and various other best-in-class retailers. The trust has full or partial ownership interests in 481 retail properties primarily anchored by market-leading grocery stores. Its properties are principally located in affluent and infill trade areas across the United States and contain approximately 48.4 million square feet of gross leasable area. The trust generates about $1.32 billion in revenues and is based in Jacksonville, Florida.

On February 8th, 2024, Regency Centers reported its Q4 and full-year results for the period ending December 31st, 2023. Revenues rose by 14.3% to $359.6 million. Higher revenues were primarily due to higher leasing and occupancy rates. Regency's same-property portfolio was 95.7% leased, 30 basis points higher compared to the previous quarter or 60 basis points higher compared to last year.

Nareit FFO grew 4.7% to $190.0 million year-over-year. On a per-share basis, FFO landed at $1.02, three cents lower compared to $1.01 in Q3-2022. For the year, FFO-per-share came in at $4.15, up from $4.10 in fiscal 2022.

Management introduced its outlook for fiscal 2024. They expect same-property net operating income growth, excluding termination fees or collection of 2020/2021 reserves, to be between +2% and +2.5%. Further, Nareit FFO/share is expected to be between $4.14 and $4.20. We have utilized the midpoint of this range in our estimates.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Regency has achieved a solid track record of modest but gradually higher FFO/share over time. The 10-year and 5-year FFO/share CAGRs stand at 4.0% and 7.4%, respectively. In recent years, the trust has excelled despite the challenges faced by retail locations due to the growing prominence of e-commerce, a trend that was further accentuated during the COVID-19 pandemic. The company's major tenants, including Kroger (2.7% of annualized rent), Whole Foods (2.6%), and TJX (2.6%), are not at risk of going out of business anytime soon. Regency's growth prospects may seem somewhat limited, but there are noteworthy factors to consider. These include rising leasing rates, portfolio value enhancement within its development pipeline, and the pursuit of additional accretive investment opportunities, exemplified by the recent acquisition of Urstadt Biddle. Along with taking into account higher interest rates, we anticipate a 4% growth in FFO/share through 2029.

Regency slashed its dividend during the Great Recession and resumed its DPS growth in 2014. Since then, dividends have grown annually. We expect DPS growth of around 3.5% in the medium-term, which underlying FFOs could sustain.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	Now	2029
Avg. P/FFO	19.6	23.6	31.4	20.6	17.2	17.2	13.5	16.6	10.7	14.4	14.7	13.0
Avg. Yld.	3.3%	2.8%	2.3%	3.3%	3.4%	3.5%	6.0%	3.5%	5.8%	4.6%	4.4%	4.8%

Regency has traded a P/FFO close to 15 over the past five years. We believe that the current multiple of 14.7 overvalues the stock, given the current interest rate levels and Regency's modest growth prospects. A P/FFO of 13.0 should better suit the stock, as it takes account of these elements, along with the trust's qualities, including tenant diversification and high occupancy rates. Regency is currently offering a yield of 4.4%. We believe this is a sub-optimal yield relative to Regency's growth prospects.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

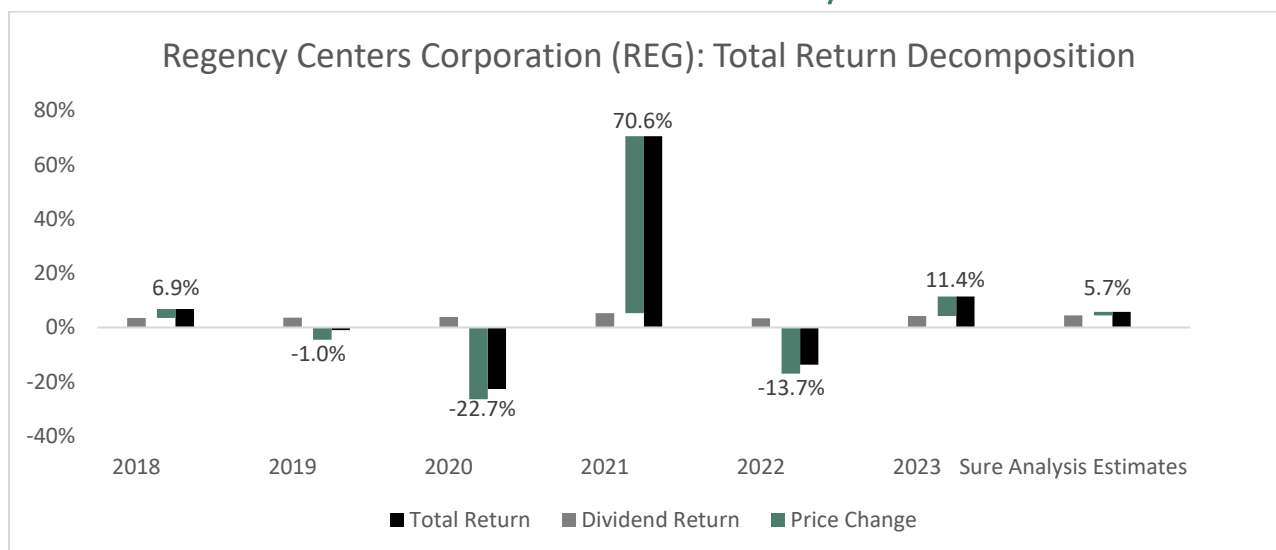

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2029
Payout	65%	66%	73%	68%	58%	60%	81%	60%	62%	63%	64%	63%

While Regency did cut its dividend back during the Great Financial Crisis, we don't expect a dividend cut due to the resiliency shown during the pandemic combined with the relatively comfortable 65% payout ratio based on this year's expected FFO/share. That being said, if the trust's financials were to be under pressure again, a cut is not unlikely either. Overall, Regency enjoys some decent qualities, including a quality tenant base of blue-chip companies, with no tenant accounting for more than 3.0% of annualized base rent (Publix). It also maintains a strong balance sheet with a BBB+ credit rating from S&P, has $1.19 billion in liquidity, and features a net debt to EBITDA ratio of 5.4, which is somewhat tolerable. Still, a recession is likely to adversely impact the trust's financials and lead to a dividend cut.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Regency Centers has shown a robust track record of FFO generation, maintaining solid financials even during the pandemic despite facing significant headwinds. Further, management's guidance points toward another year of relatively stable performance ahead despite higher interest rates. We forecast annualized total returns of 5.7% through 2029, driven by a growth of 4% in FFO/share and the 4.4 % dividend yield, offset by a 2.4% annual valuation headwind. We rate shares a hold due to projected returns.
