Overview & Current Events

TELUS Corporation is one of the 'big three' Canadian telecommunications companies along with BCE, Inc. (BCE) and Rogers Communications (RCI). TELUS is focused in Western Canada and provides a full range of communication products and services through two business segments: Wireline and Wireless. TELUS is cross-listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange and the New York Stock Exchange, where it trades under the tickers 'T' and 'TU', respectively. TELUS reports financial results in Canadian dollars but all the figures in this report are in USD. The stock currently has a market capitalization of $24.5 billion. On March 17th, 2020, TELUS implemented a 2-for-1 stock split.

In early May, TELUS reported (5/9/24) financial results for the first quarter of fiscal 2024. The company posted strong customer growth. It posted total mobile customer growth of 209,000, a first-quarter record, and growth of fixed customers by 49,000. However, revenue edged down -1% due to lower service revenues. As a result, earnings-per-share dipped -4%. Nevertheless, management reiterated its guidance for 2%-4% growth of revenue and 5.5%-7.5% growth of adjusted EBITDA in 2024. Accordingly, we still expect an approximate 10% recovery of earnings-per-share off the 10-year low level of 2023.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

TELUS pays out the majority of its earnings as dividends, which leaves little in the way of retained earnings to invest for growth. Still, the company managed to grow its earnings-per-share by 3.6% per year during 2010-2019. Moreover, thanks to the decent momentum of the company in wireless and wireline additions and especially the low comparison base formed this year, we expect annual earnings-per-share growth of 10% over the next five years.

In terms of dividend payments, before the onset of the pandemic, TELUS had a publicly communicated target of 7%-10% annual dividend growth through 2022. We have assumed a marginal annual dividend growth rate (0.5%) over the next five years, in order to be on the safe side. This growth rate will keep the payout ratio within reasonable levels for a telecommunications company.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	Now	2029
Avg. P/E	17.1	18.5	20.1	18.3	17.4	17.0	21.3	26.2	26.4	26.5	20.5	17.6

Excluding the outlier years 2016 and 2020-2023, TELUS has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio of 17.6 over the last decade, which we believe represents an approximation of fair value for this Canadian telecommunications corporation. The stock is currently trading at a price-to-earnings ratio of 20.5, which is higher than the historical average. If the stock reverts to its average valuation level over the next five years, it will incur a -3.0% annualized drag due to the contraction of its valuation level.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2029
Payout	64.1%	71.6%	87.4%	79.3%	76.9%	78.7%	106%	121%	120%	154%	145%	92.2%

TELUS’ main competitive advantage comes from being an entrenched player in a capital-intensive and highly regulated industry. Indeed, according to Canada’s telecommunications regulator – the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commissions (CRTC) – the Top 5 telecommunications providers gather 85% of the industry’s revenues. This discourages potential competitors from entering the market and is a competitive advantage for TELUS. Due to the hefty capital expenses required in the telecommunications sector, the companies of this sector usually carry heavy amounts of debt. However, TELUS has a manageable amount of debt, as its liabilities comprise less than three-quarters of its total assets while its interest expense consumes 44% of its operating income. At the security level, TELUS has traded with remarkably little stock price volatility since the 2007-2009 financial crisis. Since the onset of the pandemic, the volatility of the stock has increased but the business of TELUS proved resilient to this crisis.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

TELUS Corporation is one of Canada’s largest telecommunications providers. Its attractive dividend yield, its overall business stability and its resilience to recessions make it attractive for conservative, income-seeking investors. TELUS is now hurt by a slowing economy and somewhat heating competition but we expect it to recover in the long run. We expect TELUS to offer an 11.7% average annual return over the next five years thanks to 10.0% earnings growth and its 7.1% dividend, partly offset by a -3.0% valuation headwind. The stock receives a buy rating.
