Overview & Current Events

BP is one of the largest oil and gas corporations in the world based on its $89 billion market cap. It is a fully integrated company and operates in two segments: upstream and downstream (mostly refining). BP has gone through extreme challenges since its major accident in 2010. It has paid about $70 billion for that accident so far. This amount is almost equal to all its earnings since. Even in 2019, nine years after the accident, BP paid $2.4 billion (24% of its earnings) for it. The company expects to pay $1.2 billion for that accident in 2024.

In late July, BP reported (7/30/24) financial results for the second quarter of fiscal 2024. Refining margins contracted significantly off record levels but the price of oil improved sequentially. As a result, earnings-per-share edged up 3%, from $0.97 to $1.00, and exceeded the analysts' consensus by $0.09. BP has beaten the analysts' consensus in 10 of the last 14 quarters and has reduced its debt in 15 of the last 17 quarters. It also raised its dividend by 10% and reiterated that its dividend is sustainable even at a Brent price of $40. Moreover, it maintained its share repurchase program of $14 billion until the end of 2025. This program can reduce the share count by 16% at the current stock price. BP also has a cost-cutting program that will save $2 billion per year from 2027. The oil major keeps thriving thanks to above average price of oil but we expect the price of oil to remain somewhat lower than it was last year. As a result, we still expect earnings-per-share around $4.50 this year.

BP has greatly improved its portfolio in recent years via the addition of low-cost reserves. In 2020, it announced a major shift in its strategy. BP announced that it would boost its investment in renewable energy sources 10-fold, and it would simultaneously reduce its investment in oil and gas projects so much that it expected to reduce its oil and gas production by -42%, from 2.6 million barrels per day now to 1.5 million barrels per day in 2030. However, last year, the company announced that it will implement this transition much more slowly than it initially planned.

Nevertheless, the historical shift from its core business has greatly raised the uncertainty of future performance of BP. A shift from the core business is always a red flag for any stock, particularly for BP, which has always been infamous for its aversion of renewable energy projects. On the bright side, BP is thriving now thanks to favorable oil prices. Oil producers are hesitant to boost their output amid fears over the secular shift from oil to clean energy sources but we expect them to eventually boost their output and drive oil prices lower, just like in all previous cycles. Due to the somewhat high base formed by the expected earnings this year, we expect the earnings-per-share of BP to decline at a -4% average annual rate over the next five years. If the oil major achieves high returns from its renewable energy projects, it may exceed our expectations but it is in uncharted waters right now and hence it is prudent to be conservative.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	Now	2029
Avg. P/E	11.8	---	---	35.5	11.5	13.6	---	6.8	3.5	7.7	7.3	12.0
Avg. Yld.	5.0%	6.4%	7.3%	6.6%	5.7%	6.1%	5.2%	5.0%	4.5%	4.5%	5.8%	4.6%

Excluding the outlier year 2017, in which the depressed earnings resulted in an abnormally high price-to-earnings ratio, BP has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio of 9.2 over the last decade. It has traded at such a cheap valuation mostly due to the excessive liabilities that resulted from its accident in 2010. We believe that a fair earnings multiple for BP is around 12.0. BP is now trading at a price-to-earnings ratio of 7.3 due to the above average earnings expected this year. If it trades at our assumed fair valuation in five years, it will enjoy a 10.4% annualized valuation gain.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2029
Payout	47.2%	---	---	233%	65.5%	83.4%	---	33.8%	15.8%	34.9%	42.7%	55.0%

After several years of a superior dividend yield, BP cut its dividend in 2020. Nevertheless, the management of BP is very shareholder friendly. Even when BP was forced to suspend its dividend after its Macondo blowout amid public outrage, it resumed its dividend payments after just three quarters. Moreover, during 2015-2017, when the company incurred material losses, it continued to pay its dividend, which amounted to about $6 billion per year. The dividend is clearly a top priority for BP's management team, but the -50% cut in 2020 was warranted due to the debt load of BP. We view the current 5.8% dividend as fairly safe, particularly given the drastic reduction of the debt of BP in the last three years.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

After having incurred two fierce downturns, its accident in the Gulf of Mexico and the 2014-2017 downturn, BP faced another downturn in 2020 due to the pandemic. However, the oil major is thriving right now thanks to high oil prices. BP has more than doubled off its bottom in 2020. The stock could offer a 10.3% average annual return over the next five years thanks to its 5.8% dividend and a 10.4% annualized valuation tailwind, partly offset by a -4% annual decline of earnings-per-share. The stock maintains its hold rating. We need a somewhat higher return to upgrade the stock to "buy" due to the risk related to the changing landscape of the oil industry.
