Overview & Current Events

Marathon Petroleum Corp. (MPC) was spun off from Marathon Oil Corp. (MRO) in 2011. After the acquisition of Andeavor Logistics in October of 2018, MPC has become the largest U.S. refiner, with 16 refineries and a refining capacity of 3.1 million barrels per day. It also has a marketing system that includes ~7,100 branded locations. In addition, MPC owns a midstream MLP (MPLX), which has gathering and processing assets as well as pipelines for crude oil and light products. Marathon Petroleum has a market capitalization of $60.3 billion.

In early August, Marathon Petroleum reported (8/6/24) financial results for the second quarter of fiscal 2024. Refining margins moderated from a blowout level of $22.10 per barrel in last year's quarter to $17.37, but remained above average thanks to the tight global market of oil products caused by the sanctions of the U.S. and Europe on Russia. As a result, the refining segment saw its EBITDA decrease from $3.2 billion to $2.0 billion and earnings-per-share fell -23%, from $5.33 to $4.12, though they exceeded the analysts' consensus by $1.00. MPC has beaten the analysts' estimates in 20 of the last 21 quarters. As refining margins have remained elevated amid the sanctions of western countries on Russia, we expect earnings-per-share of $14.00 this year, far above the historical average of the company.

Thanks to its blowout earnings, MPC has reduced its share count by a massive 42% in the last three years and has another $5.8 billion for share repurchases, which can reduce the share count by another 10%. Overall, MPC is thriving thanks to the aforementioned sanctions, which have resulted in above-average refining margins. However, we are confident that refining margins will deflate in the upcoming years due to the cyclical nature of this industry.

MPC greatly benefits from the inland location of some of the refineries of Andeavor. Thanks to the oil supply glut under normal conditions, these refineries usually buy their crude oil at a deep discount to WTI, so they enjoy high margins. Furthermore, refiners benefit from the new international marine rules, which have come into effect since January 1st, 2020. As per these rules, vessels that sail in international waters are forced to burn diesel or ultra-low sulfur fuel oil instead of heavy fuel oil. As the former are much more expensive than the latter, they boost refiner earnings. MPC is properly positioned to benefit from the new marine rules. Thanks to a series of past investments, the refiner can upgrade about 600,000 barrels per day of low-value residue to diesel. As long as the war in Ukraine does not come to an end, MPC will keep thriving thanks to the tight oil market. However, due to the blowout earnings expected this year and the sale of the Speedway business, we expect earnings-per-share to decline -10.0% per year on average until 2029.

Marathon Petroleum Corp. (MPC)

Updated August 20th, 2024, by Aristofanis Papadatos

MPC is currently trading at 12.8 times its expected earnings-per-share. This valuation level is higher than the historical average of 12.2 of the stock. If the stock trades at its average earnings multiple in five years, it will incur a -0.9% annualized drag in its return.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2029
Payout	21.0%	21.7%	61.5%	40.3%	34.8%	42.9%	---	94.7%	9.5%	13.0%	23.6%	44.1%

The acquisition of Andeavor has greatly enhanced the geographic diversification of Marathon and its potential to take advantage of fluctuations in price spreads among different types of crude oil and the dynamics of export markets. The acquisition will increase the earnings of the company and its resilience during downturns in the long run.

On the other hand, refining is a highly cyclical business and hence refiners are vulnerable to recessions. This was evident in the Great Recession, when the demand for oil products deteriorated and refining margins plunged. MPC was caught with a significant amount of debt in the downturn caused by the pandemic due to its acquisition of Andeavor. The company solved the problem with the sale of Speedway. Also given the ongoing recovery of global demand for refined products, the dividend has become safe.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

MPC is thriving thanks to the recovery of global demand for oil products and the war in Ukraine, which has significantly reduced the global supply of these products, thus resulting in above-average refining margins. With that said, the stock of MPC has rallied nearly 10-fold off its bottom in 2020. As a result, we expect the stock to offer a -7.9% average annual return over the next five years, as its 1.8% dividend may be offset by a -10% annual decline of earnings-per-share and a -0.9% valuation headwind. We thus rate the stock as a sell. MPC is thriving right now, but investors should keep the highly cyclical nature of the refining business in mind. Whenever the war in Ukraine comes to an end, MPC will have material downside from its current level.
