Enterprise Financial's average annual EPS growth rates over the past decade and half-decade have been 15.8% and 5.8%, respectively. These results were supported by Enterprise's strong track record of expanding its loan and deposit portfolios, sporting 10-year CAGRs of 16.6% and 17.4%, respectively.

Continuing to grow its loan, deposit, and investment portfolios, as well as improving the quality of its assets, combined with acquisitions, should enable the company to achieve 6% annual EPS growth over the next five years.

Enterprise considers the Midwest to be its most stable market region where it has its greatest foothold, with the southwest and the west representing its growth markets, particularly California, Arizona, Nevada, and Texas.

Acquisitions have been a core component to Enterprise's growth model. It acquired Trinity Capital Corporation (with $1.2B in assets) in 2019, as well as Seacoast Commerce Banc Holdings ($1.3B in assets) and First Choice Bancorp ($91M in assets) in 2020 and 2021, respectively.

Published October 23rd, 2024 by Quinn Mohammed

The company's dividend has increased at a higher rate than its EPS, with a 9-year and 5-year CAGR of 18.9% and 11.7%, respectively. Dividend growth has been slowing, and we expect it to slow further as the payout ratio has risen and EPS growth tapers off from its historically high rate.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	Now	2029
Avg. P/E	13.0	15.1	14.6	17.5	19.6	11.9	10.3	13.9	11.0	7.8	11.4	11.0
Avg. Yld.	1.2%	1.0%	1.1%	1.0%	0.9%	1.3%	2.1%	1.6%	1.7%	2.3%	2.1%	2.2%

Enterprise's average PE ratios over the previous ten and five years have been 13.5 and 11.0, respectively. Its current PE ratio of 11.4 is just above its average PE ratio and our fair value estimate of 11.0. If the company's valuation were to decline to our estimate of fair value, the stock would incur a -0.7% annualized drag on its total return.

We are forecasting dividend growth of 6% in the intermediate term, lower than it's grown in recent years, as the payout ratio now consumes one fourth of earnings. Enterprise has paid an average dividend yield of 1.4% and 1.8% over the last ten and five years. Given the stock now yields 2.1%, it could be considered undervalued on this basis.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2029
Payout	16%	14%	17%	21%	12%	17%	26%	19%	17%	20%	24%	24%

Enterprise Financial was not among the many banks in the U.S. to cut their dividends during the Great Recession. From 2007 through 2014, Enterprise Financial continued to pay a $0.525 quarterly dividend. However, since 2015, Enterprise has increased its dividend every year. During the pandemic, Enterprise's EPS declined 22%, but the bank remained highly profitable, and its dividend was under no threat, as its payout ratio remained manageable at only one fourth of earnings.

We don't see Enterprise Financial boasting any strong competitive advantage over its peers in the regional banking industry, as banking services are essentially commoditized. Still, the company is backed by strong management, with the team averaging 16 years of tenure and 23 years of industry experience.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

The share price of EFSC has risen by 19% year-to-date, underperforming the 23% increase of the S&P 500 Index. Enterprise Financial could offer a 7.3% average annual return over the next five years, stemming from 6% annual EPS growth and its 2.1% dividend, partly offset by -0.7% multiple contraction. Enterprise Financial maintains its hold rating.
