Overview & Current Events

Tenaris SA is a global manufacturer of steel pipes and related services that is headquartered in Luxembourg and is a majority-owned subsidiary of the Techint Group. Tenaris has significant exposure to oil prices as the majority of its customers operate in the energy sector. Its common stock is traded on three international stock exchanges, but U.S. investors can initiate a stake in the business through ADR shares. The company could produce about $13 billion in revenue this year, and currently has a market capitalization of $21 billion.

Tenaris posted third quarter earnings on November 6th, 2024, and results were better than expected on both the top and bottom lines. The company saw adjusted earnings-per-share of 81 cents, which was 12 cents ahead of expectations. Revenue was off 10% year-over-year to $2.91 billion, but still beat lowered expectations by $120 million.

Net sales in Q3 were affected by lower prices in the Americas, as well as lower demand in the US, Mexico, and Saudi Arabia. Lower pipe shipments in Argentina weighed as well. Margins were lower due to these factors as well, with adjusted EBITDA margin coming to 24.7% of revenue, down 110 basis points quarter-over-quarter.

Free cash flow was $373 million, of which $182 million was spent on share repurchases. The company had a net cash position of $4 billion as of the end of September, or nearly 20% of the market cap of the stock.

The company announced on November 11th it was commencing a $700 million share repurchase program, to be completed no later than March of 2025.

We've slightly lowered our estimate of earnings for this year to $3.40 per share, down fractionally from our prior estimate of $3.40 with one quarter to go.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Tenaris' growth over the last decade has been far from constant, but this is largely due to the prolonged downturn in oil prices that began in 2014. Since the majority of Tenaris' customers operate within the energy sector, this reduces demand for its products and services and causes a decline in its aggregate sales.

Last year saw a strong rebound in Tenaris' earnings capacity. However, oil prices remain a key risk for Tenaris; much lower oil and gas prices significantly impaired the company's ability to produce earnings in 2020. Tenaris is beholden to capital expenditures of oil and gas producers, which generally decline when oil prices remain low for long periods of time. Our estimate of intermediate-term growth is 6%. Weak oil prices globally are weighing on Tenaris' customers and therefore, demand for Tenaris itself. We think the recovery in earnings peaked in 2023 given this development, and that it will be very difficult for Tenaris to grow from more normalized earnings for 2024.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	Now	2029
Avg. P/E	18.5	25.2	---	40.3	22.6	19.3	64.1	11.1	7.9	5.1	10.9	10.0
Avg. Yld.	2.1%	3.3%	3.4%	2.6%	2.5%	3.4%	1.0%	2.6%	2.6%	3.1%	3.6%	2.9%

Tenaris has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio (P/E) of ~17 over the last decade, if we exclude the years in which its P/E ratio was artificially elevated due to depressed earnings caused by the decline in oil prices. We use 10 times earnings as our estimate of fair value given that Tenaris appears to be well on the way to recovery. Today, shares trade for 10.9 times our earnings estimate of $3.40, which means we expect a slightly negative impact from the valuation if the multiple were to revert to our fair value P/E estimate of 10 over time.

For income investors, we note that the country of Luxembourg imposes a 15% withholding tax on Tenaris' dividend payments. We expect the payout to remain under 50% of earnings by 2029, with the annualized dividend at $1.34 per share currently. We note that Tenaris' unusual dividend policy is very difficult to forecast.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2029
Payout	40%	83%	600%	107%	55%	65%	64%	28%	20%	16%	40%	30%

Tenaris has boosted its dividend for four consecutive years now. We see the dividend outlook as murky at the moment, however, as Tenaris' dividend policy is quite variable.

Qualitatively, Tenaris' most compelling competitive advantage is its entrenched position in a technical segment of the energy sector that relies tremendously on strong customer-supplier relationships. As a large company with global operations, Tenaris' services are unlikely to be replaced by newer, smaller industry disruptors. Its leverage to the oil and gas markets has been both a blessing and a curse in recent years. Tenaris is not susceptible to recessions so much as oil prices, so investors should focus on the latter, not the former, when assessing safety.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

We see Tenaris as struggling to replicate outstanding 2023 results moving forward. With 7.1% total return prospects, we rate Tenaris as a hold, and note that investors are taking on inherent oil price risk by owning shares. The valuation is above fair value today. We see 6% growth, a 1.7% headwind from the valuation, and 3.6% yield driving total returns.
