Overview & Current Events

Value Line is a financial services company which offers investment research and fund management operations. The company was organized in 1982 as a successor to the Arnold Bernhard & Co., and investors should note that Arnold Bernhard & Co retains control of 91.6% of all outstanding VALU shares. Value Line has long published industry-leading periodicals such as the Value Line Investment Survey and the Value Line 600. The company has adapted to the changing times, offering many of its publications, newsletters, and other such information products through digital channels. Value Line sells subscriptions to various clients including individual investors, professional fund managers, and libraries. In addition, Value Line holds a substantial non-voting interest in EULAV Asset Management, which is the investment advisor and distributor for the Value Line Family of mutual funds.

Value Line is a steady business with a stable, but not meaningfully increasing subscription base. To that point, Value Line generated $36 million in revenues in fiscal year 2015, and $37 million in its already-concluded fiscal year 2024, showing virtually no increase over the past decade. Both Value Line's investment research offerings and mutual fund portfolios face significant competition.

On December 13th, 2024, Value Line reported its financial results for its Q2 fiscal year 2025 period ending October 31st, 2024. Earnings per share jumped to 60 cents per share for the period, which was well above the 37 cents earned in the same portion of last year. While the core periodicals business was little changed, Value Line enjoyed a solid jump in revenues from its asset management business along with a sizable gain on its investment portfolio, as opposed to a loss in the same period of the prior year. We believe investment portfolio returns will be volatile from quarter to quarter, though we do expect its earnings to rise in fiscal year 2025 thanks to the stronger climate for the asset management operations.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030

Shares	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	9	9	9	9	9

Value Line has more than doubled its earnings per share over the past decade, and it has posted a 5.4% compounded growth rate over the past five years. At first glance, that seems promising. However, the company has barely grown top-line revenues whatsoever. Rather, it has enjoyed stronger returns on its investment portfolio. As of October 31st, the company held $39 million in fixed income securities and $22 million in equity investments, and the company actively manages these positions. Over the past few years, thanks to higher interest rates and strong stock market performance, Value Line has generated more investment income than it did in prior years. We are cautious that this positive trend will continue. That's especially true if the Federal Reserve cuts interest rates significantly, which could lower Value Line's future returns on its fixed income holdings. As such, we model more conservative 3% earnings growth going forward.

Value Line, Inc. (VALU)

Updated December 17th, 2024, by Ian Bezek

We expect 3% annualized dividend growth, in line with its earnings growth. The company has repurchased a modest amount of stock in recent years, but buybacks are limited due to the company’s small public stock float.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/E	19.5	21.9	16.4	12.8	18.6	19.9	12.6	26.1	23.9	17.9	25.1	20.0
Avg. Yld.	3.6%	4.0%	3.5%	3.6%	3.2%	3.2%	2.8%	2.6%	1.6%	2.5%	2.2%	2.8%

Value Line has averaged a 19x P/E ratio since 2015 and a 20.1x P/E ratio over the past five years. Given the stability in the company’s business and the limited top-line growth prospects, we do not expect any considerable change in its valuation going forward. Value Line has averaged a 3.1% dividend yield since 2015, and we expect shares to continue to offer a similar yield in future years. The current 2.2% yield is well below that average, however.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	81%	87%	64%	48%	62%	52%	35%	36%	54%	56%	56%	56%

Value Line has a tremendous balance sheet. It has no debt or other meaningful long-term obligations. And on the assets side, it holds a considerable chunk of cash, fixed income, and equity investments in comparison to its market capitalization. The company’s subscription-based revenues have proven to be stable throughout various economic climates, and the mutual fund business is also fairly predictable. Over the longer-term, Value Line faces intense competition in both of its business lines, which will limit its growth prospects. However, the company has plenty of resources with which to adapt to the changing financial services landscape.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Value Line’s stability and strong balance sheet are appealing aspects. However, the company’s slow growth rate puts a limit on the firm’s forward prospects. Historically, Value Line was able to generate more earnings out of its investment portfolio thanks to higher interest rates and a rapidly rising overall U.S. stock market, but we are not sure investors can count on similar conditions over the next five years. Shares have rallied sharply over the past quarter and now significantly exceed our fair value estimate. We see just 0.9% annualized total returns from here, as multiple compression will largely offset the firm’s dividend yield and earnings growth.
