Overview & Current Events

Lexington Realty Trust owns equity and debt investments in single-tenant properties and land across the United States. The trust's portfolio is primarily industrial equity investments. The trust grows the industrial portfolio by financing, or by acquiring new investments with long-term leases, repositioning the portfolio by recycling capital and opportunistically taking advantage of capital markets. Additionally, the company supplies investment advisory and asset management services for investors in the single-tenant net-lease asset market. Lexington Realty trades on the NYSE under the ticker symbol LXP and is headquartered in New York. LXP has a market capitalization of $2.4 billion.

On May 1st, 2025, Lexington reported first quarter 2025 results for the period ending March 31st, 2025. The trust announced adjusted funds from operations (AFFO) of $0.16 per share for the quarter, flat against the prior year quarter. Same-store NOI rose 5.2% from a year ago.

For Q1, the trust completed 540K square feet of new leases and lease extensions, which increased base and cash base rents by 52.5% and 58.9%, respectively. It also began the redevelopment of a 250K square foot warehouse, and disposed of another warehouse for gross proceeds of $35 million.

The trust's stabilized industrial portfolio was 93.3% leased. At quarter end, Lexington had leverage of 5.9X net debt to adjusted EBITDA.

Leadership reaffirmed its 2025 guidance, expecting to generate 2025 AFFO of $0.61 to $0.65 per share.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Lexington Realty has a long-term track record of declining adjusted funds from operations in both the historical nine and five year periods. Over the last nine and five years, LXP's adjusted FFO has decreased by -5.8% and -4.4% per year on average. Additionally, the dividend has also shrunk over the long-term, and today it is still below its 2012 level. Despite this, now that the trust has transformed itself into a full-fledged industrial REIT, we estimate it can grow AFFO per share by 9.0% annually in the intermediate term.

The trust's ballooning share count will continue to expand to fund industrial property acquisitions and bolster the portfolio. Additionally, as development projects come to completion, and new leases are signed, AFFO will grow. The trust can also grow organically through increases in same store net operating income (NOI).

We believe it will tack on token increases to the annual dividend to build a consecutive dividend growth streak from the low base in 2019.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/AFFO	8.4	8.3	10.5	8.8	12.2	13.9	16.4	17.7	14.0	14.5	13.0	14.5
Avg. Yld.	7.4%	7.4%	6.8%	8.4%	6.2%	4.0%	3.4%	3.9%	5.1%	5.6%	6.6%	4.0%

The current P/AFFO of 13.0 based on 2025's estimated AFFO is a premium to the 10-year average of 12.5. Given the trust's transformation to a complete industrial property REIT, we peg fair value at 14.5 times AFFO, which implies the potential for a valuation tailwind.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	62%	60%	72%	74%	52%	56%	55%	72%	71%	81%	86%	59%

Lexington Realty has maintained a somewhat conservative payout ratio over the last decade; however, it has only been able to do so because it has cut the dividend multiple times as adjusted funds from operations shrunk. This unfortunately adds to the risk of the company and increases the volatility of estimating total returns.

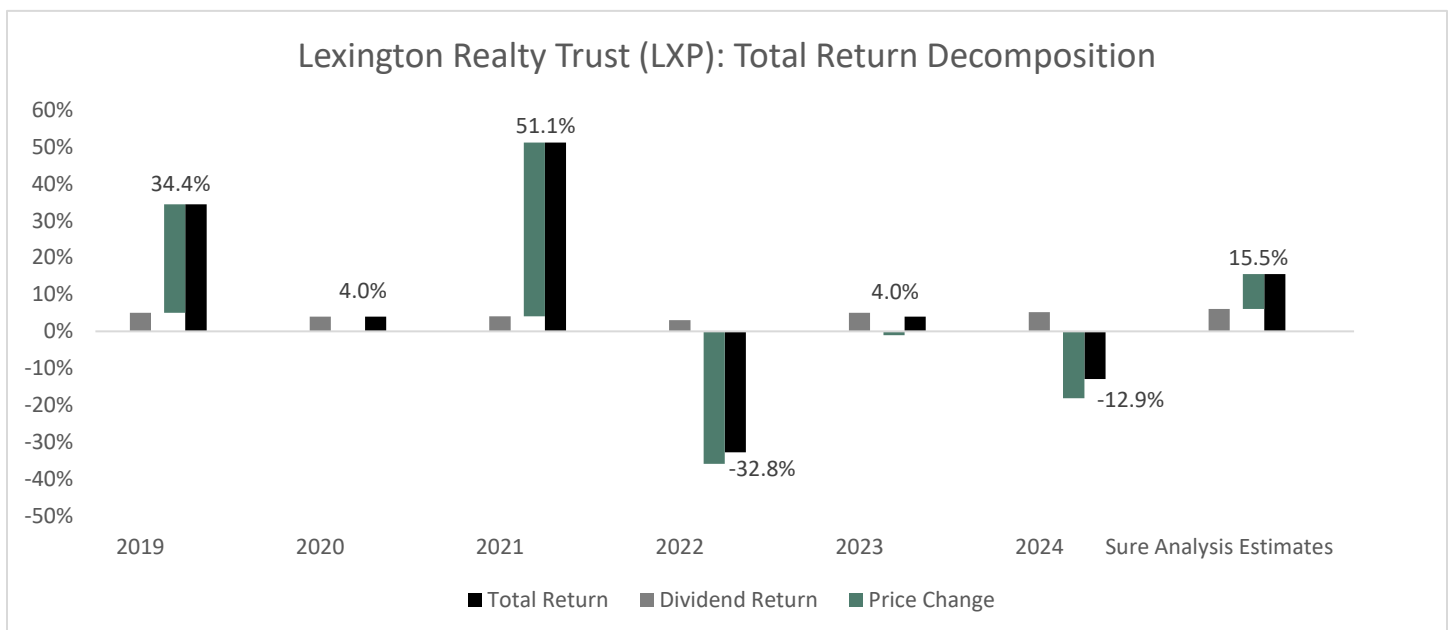

LXP was negatively impacted by the great recession, which saw the trust's dividend fall from a height of $1.83 in 2006 to $0.42 in 2010. During that time, the share count increased massively and still the trust reported losses. Lexington is not recession resistant, though its industrial concentration was a boon during the COVID pandemic.

We see only a small competitive advantage in LXP's growth strategy, where they invest only in "shovel-ready" opportunities to avoid risk, and partner with merchant builders, who will typically take on the risk of cost overruns.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Lexington Realty Trust has a history of declining adjusted funds from operations over the last decade, and the recent five year period. Additionally, the dividend cannot be trusted after being slashed multiple times. Nevertheless, the high dividend yield of 6.6% adds to total returns meaningfully. And we believe the company can squeeze growth out of its industrial property focus. Today shares trade at 90% of our fair value estimate. Overall, we expect 15.5% in annualized total returns, but given its dividend history, LXP earns a hold rating.
