Overview & Current Events

Southern Company is a major energy utility that serves ~9 million customers in the U.S. via its subsidiaries. It has a market capitalization of $100.1 billion.

Due to cost overruns and its acquisition of AGL Resources for $12 billion in 2016, Southern has almost doubled its net debt in the last nine years. As it refinances its debt on a regular basis, it greatly benefits when interest rates are low, just like during 2008-2021. On the other hand, the Fed has raised interest rates to nearly 23-year highs and thus the interest expense of Southern has increased 51% since the end of 2021.

In early May, Southern reported (5/1/25) results for Q1-2025. Revenue grew 17% over the prior year's quarter and adjusted earnings-per-share grew 19%, from $1.03 to $1.23, thanks to higher utility revenues. Southern has finally started up its Vogtle Units 3 and 4, the first new nuclear facilities built in the U.S. in a generation. This project faced so many setbacks that it became 8 years late, with a cost more than double the initial cost estimate. Southern has missed analysts' estimates in only 3 of the last 33 quarters. Management reiterated its positive guidance for 2025, expecting earnings-per-share of $4.20-$4.30. Notably, Southern grew its bottom line at a double-digit rate (11%) in 2024 for the first time in more than a decade thanks to the start-up of its nuclear plant.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Due to its huge capital expenses and its debt pile, the company issues new shares on a regular basis. Southern has increased its share count at a 2.1% average annual rate over the last decade. Management previously stated that it would need to issue only $2.0 billion of shares (2% of the current market cap) in the next five years but it has already issued this number of shares and hence it is likely to exceed its dilution guidance once again.

Southern has grown its earnings-per-share at a 4.0% annual rate in the last decade and at a 5.4% annual rate in the last five years. It has provided guidance for annual earnings-per-share growth of 5%-7% in the long term but management recently stated that it may achieve ~7% growth in the upcoming years. Given the decent business momentum of Southern, the expected contribution from the Vogtle Plant in the upcoming years but also the lackluster performance record of Southern, we expect 6.0% earnings-per-share growth until 2030.

Southern Company (SO)

Updated May 6th, 2025 by Aristofanis Papadatos

Southern has rallied 36% in 15 months, as the uncertainty over its Vogtle plants has vanished. As a result, the stock is now trading at a price-to-earnings ratio of 21.3, which is higher than the 10-year average price-to-earnings ratio of 17.6. If the utility trades at its average valuation level in five years, it will incur a -3.8% annualized drag.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	75.7%	78.4%	71.7%	77.5%	79.1%	78.2%	76.8%	75.0%	76.2%	70.6%	69.3%	59.5%

The competitive advantage of Southern is its state-regulated business, which requires excessive capital expenses for infrastructure and poses high barriers to entry to potential competitors. Southern has stretched its balance sheet in recent years. Its debt/assets ratio has climbed to a near decade-high level while its interest expense currently consumes 35% of its operating income. On the bright side, these metrics have somewhat improved lately thanks to asset sales, whose proceeds have been used for debt reduction.

Southern has raised its dividend for 24 consecutive years and has not cut it for 78 consecutive years. It currently offers a 3.3% dividend yield, which is equal to the median yield of utilities. Due to the weak balance sheet, dividend growth is likely to remain meager (~3% annually) going forward.

Southern is attractive for its resilience during recessions. In the Great Recession, when most companies saw their earnings collapse, the earnings-per-share of Southern fell just -1.3%. In the downturn caused by the pandemic, Southern grew its earnings thanks to its resilient business model, which involves rate hikes.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

The stock of Southern is a safe haven amid high inflation thanks to its reliable rate hikes year after year. However, the stock has rallied 36% in the last 15 months. We thus expect Southern to offer a 5.1% average annual return over the next five years, as 6.0% earnings growth and its 3.3% dividend may be partly offset by a -3.8% valuation headwind. The stock maintains its hold rating.
