Overview & Current Events

Tenaris SA is a global manufacturer of steel pipes and related services that is headquartered in Luxembourg and is a majority-owned subsidiary of the Techint Group. Tenaris has significant exposure to oil prices as the majority of its customers operate in the energy sector. Its common stock is traded on three international stock exchanges, but U.S. investors can initiate a stake in the business through ADR shares. The company could produce about $12 billion in revenue this year, and currently has a market capitalization of $17 billion.

Tenaris posted first quarter earnings on April 30th, 2025, and results were better than expected on both the top and bottom lines. Earnings-per-share came to 94 cents, which was 16 cents better than expected. Revenue was off 15% year-over-year to $2.92 billion, but did beat estimates by $50 million.

Sales were driven by a 3% sequential increase from higher seasonal volumes in Canada and US onshore sales. Average selling prices were off once again due to less favorable product mix.

EBITDA was up 6% sequentially, driven by operational efficiencies, with an EBITDA margin of 24% of revenue. Operating cash flow was $821 million, and free cash flow was $647 million after accounting for $174 million in capital expenditures. Share buybacks were $237 million, and net cash ended the quarter at $4 billion.

We now see $3.45 in adjusted earnings-per-share for this year after a decent start to 2025.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030

DPS	$0.90	$0.90	$0.82	$0.82	$0.82	$0.14	$0.54	$0.90	$1.08	$1.34	$1.80	$2.30
Shares²	590	590	590	590	590	592	592	592	592	549	540	520

Tenaris' growth over the last decade has been far from constant, but this is largely due to the prolonged downturn in oil prices that began in 2014. Since the majority of Tenaris' customers operate within the energy sector, this reduces demand for its products and services and causes a decline in its aggregate sales.

Earnings fell sharply in 2024. Oil prices remain a key risk for Tenaris; much lower oil and gas prices significantly impaired the company's ability to produce earnings in 2020. Tenaris is beholden to capital expenditures of oil and gas producers, which generally decline when oil prices remain low for long periods of time. Our estimate of intermediate-term growth is reduced to 0%. Weak oil prices globally are weighing on Tenaris' customers and therefore, demand for Tenaris itself. We think the recovery in earnings peaked in 2023 given this development, and that it will be very difficult for Tenaris to grow from more normalized earnings for 2025, particularly with the uncertainty of tariffs.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/E	25.2	---	40.3	22.6	19.3	64.1	11.1	7.9	5.1	10.5	9.6	10.0
Avg. Yld.	3.3%	3.4%	2.6%	2.5%	3.4%	1.0%	2.6%	2.6%	3.1%	3.5%	5.5%	6.7%

Tenaris has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio (P/E) of ~17 over the last decade, if we exclude the years in which its P/E ratio was artificially elevated due to depressed earnings caused by the decline in oil prices. We use 10 times earnings as our estimate of fair value given that the earnings recovery has stalled. Today, shares trade for 9.6 times our earnings estimate of $3.45, which means we expect a slightly positive impact from the valuation if the multiple were to revert to our fair value P/E estimate of 10 over time.

For income investors, we note that the country of Luxembourg imposes a 15% withholding tax on Tenaris' dividend payments. We expect the payout to remain under 70% of earnings by 2030, with the annualized dividend at $2.30 per share currently. We note that Tenaris' unusual dividend policy is very difficult to forecast.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	83%	600%	107%	55%	65%	64%	28%	20%	16%	37%	52%	67%

Tenaris has boosted its dividend for five consecutive years now. We see the dividend outlook as murky at the moment, however, as Tenaris' dividend policy is quite variable.

Qualitatively, Tenaris' most compelling competitive advantage is its entrenched position in a technical segment of the energy sector that relies tremendously on strong customer-supplier relationships. As a large company with global operations, Tenaris' services are unlikely to be replaced by newer, smaller industry disruptors. Its leverage to the oil and gas markets has been both a blessing and a curse in recent years. Tenaris is not susceptible to recessions so much as oil prices, so investors should focus on the latter, not the former, when assessing safety.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

We see Tenaris as struggling to replicate outstanding 2023 results moving forward. With 6.4% total return prospects, we rate Tenaris as a hold, and note that investors are taking on inherent oil price risk by owning shares. The valuation is below fair value today. We see no growth, a 0.9% tailwind from the valuation, and 5.5% yield driving total returns.
