Overview & Current Events

Siemens AG is a German industrial conglomerate that operates in the following business units: Energy, Healthcare, Industry, and Infrastructure & Cities. Siemens was founded in 1847 and today employs about 327,000 people worldwide. Siemens is headquartered in Munich, Germany. American investors can purchase Siemens stock through American Depository Receipts that trade over-the-counter under the ticker SIEGY. Siemens reports its results in €, but all numbers in this report are in U.S. Dollars unless noted otherwise.

During the fiscal second quarter of 2025, Siemens AG generated revenues of €19.8 billion, which is equal to around $23 billion at current exchange rates, and which was 7% more than the revenues during the previous year's quarter on an adjusted basis. Siemens' orders did come in ahead of revenues, at €21.6 billion, which was a solid order intake pace. The fact that Siemens was able to generate higher orders than revenues and to maintain a book-to-bill ratio north of 1.0 bodes well for future revenue growth.

Siemens' earnings-per-ADR totaled €1.50 during the second quarter, which is equal to $3.73, which was up 10% compared to the previous year's quarter. While weak economic growth in Europe remains a headwind for Siemens, the company nevertheless generated solid results during its most recent fiscal year, although currency rate changes resulted in flat profits in USD. Siemens expects revenue growth of 3% to 7% for the current year, while the company also forecasts that its earnings-per-share will total around €10.40 to €11.00 this year. This equates to around $6.20 in profit on a per-ADR basis, as one share is equal to two ADRs. That would be up substantially versus 2024, with recent currency rate changes being a bit of a tailwind, as the Euro strengthened versus the Dollar in 2025.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Between 2015 and 2024, Siemens recorded an earnings-per-share growth rate of 6% annually in US Dollars. In local currencies or the Euro, Siemens' growth was a bit better, but a strengthening US Dollar offset some of the growth Siemens experienced over the last decade. Results can be cyclical, as showcased by the pandemic, when earnings pulled back. The same held true for the Great Recession.

Siemens has spun off some businesses in recent years, such as Osram or its healthcare business, which has hurt its reported profit growth to some degree. Siemens' strong order backlog and the fact that Siemens is holding a strong position in growth markets such as manufacturing 4.0 will allow Siemens to grow its profits considerably over the coming years, we believe. Between some organic business growth and some share repurchases, Siemens should be able to deliver a mid-single-digit earnings-per-share growth rate in the future.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/E	15.2	14.3	15.3	14.3	13.6	23.3	18.4	17.0	12.0	16.8	20.0	17.0
Avg. Yld.	3.5%	3.7%	3.3%	3.6%	4.2%	3.1%	2.6%	4.6%	3.2%	2.6%	2.2%	2.5%

Siemens' shares have been valued at a mid-to-high-teens price-to-earnings multiple throughout most of the last decade. Industrial businesses can be cyclical, and their stock prices and valuations tend to be cyclical as well, but surprisingly, there are no overly large outliers in Siemens' valuation throughout the last decade, except for pandemic-impacted 2020. Shares trade above our fair value estimate right now, based on estimates for the current year.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	53%	53%	51%	51%	57%	72%	44%	78%	39%	43%	44%	42%

Siemens' dividend payout ratio has been around 50% throughout the majority of the last decade, although there were some ups and downs in the ratio. The company was not forced to cut its payout during the Great Recession but reduced its payout slightly during the pandemic. We believe that Siemens' dividend is reasonably safe going forward.

One of Siemens' most important competitive advantages is its huge backlog. The company typically books more business than it is capable of completing at any given time, which causes it to operate with a book-to-bill ratio (new contracts divided by total revenue) above 1.0. This has resulted in a large backlog of uncompleted business over time. This helps in times when order intake slows down.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Siemens is a large and diversified industrial company that has managed to generate solid business growth in the past. The company is, due to its large backlog and solid order intake, relatively resilient in recessions. 2024 was a solid year for the company, and profits will rise nicely this year when denominated in USD. With shares trading somewhat above fair value and offering solid total returns, we rate Siemens a hold at current prices.
