Phillips Edison's FFO/share generation has been rather robust over the years, despite the company operating in a rather unfavorable real estate sub-sector. By creating omni-channel grocery-anchored shopping experiences, the company's properties enjoy resilient traffic. Future growth is to be powered by accretive acquisitions, high retention rates, and a focus on increasing occupancy. Driving leasing spreads higher, executing redevelopment projects, and implementing rent hikes in new leases should also lead to NOI growth, which should, in turn, lead to increased FFOs.

In 2020, same-store NOI declined by 4.1% in the midst of the pandemic, followed by a rise of 8.2% in 2021 amid NOI normalizing. In 2022, NOI growth was 4.5%, further converging toward its mean. For context, in 2017, 2018, and 2019, the metric rose by 3.5%, 3.7%, and 3.7%, respectively. Overall, based on the company's historical leasing margins, same-store NOI growth, and portfolio composition, we forecast FFO/share growth of 3% through 2030.

In terms of its dividend, Phillips Edison slashed it during the pandemic, despite producing relatively robust results, as payouts were barely covered. Note that the company was not public at the time. The dividend has been increased five times since. Due to adequate room for growth following the slash, we forecast a DPS CAGR of 5% in the medium-term.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/FFO	---	---	---	---	---	---	16.5	14.4	14.2	14.9	13.6	12.0
Avg. Yld.	---	---	---	---	---	---	3.4%	3.5%	3.6%	3.4%	3.8%	4.7%

While the stock's trading history in the public markets is short, shares have attracted a modest premium relative to its retail real estate peers. This is likely attributable to the company's properties being anchored to grocery stores, resulting in more resilient results, as well as dividends being paid monthly, which income-oriented investors generally appreciate. That said, we find Phillips Edison to be overvalued. We believe that a P/FFO close to 12 better reflects the stock's prospects. A higher dividend yield following multiple compression would better match the stock's risk profile as well.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	109%	114%	157%	104%	101%	30%	57%	51%	51%	50%	51%	57%

Phillips Edison's dividend should be relatively safe at its current levels, due to a healthy payout ratio following the latest cut. The company features several qualities as well, including the ability to retain excellent occupancy rates due to a necessity-based property portfolio, modest rent growth prospects, and noteworthy cash flow diversification. Further, the company's outstanding debt has a weighted average interest rate of 4.4% and a weighted average maturity of 5.5 years when including all extension options. That said, we believe that overall growth in the retail real estate space should be rather limited. Additionally, while the company's metrics should remain relatively robust compared to its average peer amid its tenants focusing on necessity-based goods and services, it's still vulnerable to a recession.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Phillips Edison & Company is a rather noteworthy retail real estate REIT with a number of qualities. It performed well in the past couple of years, while management projects further growth this year. Still, we believe that returns from the growth in FFO/share and the dividend could be largely offset by valuation headwinds, with our total return prospects coming in at just 4.5%. The frequency of payouts is attractive, but we would require a higher projected return to recommend the stock. As a result, PECO earns a hold rating.
