Overview & Current Events

CME Group is a Chicago-based company that operates futures and derivatives exchanges based on interest rates, equities, currencies, and commodities. The company was founded in 1898 but didn't IPO until 2002. Since then, CME Group has pursued industry consolidation through mergers (CBOT Holdings) and acquisitions (Nymex Holdings).

On October 22, 2025, CME Group Inc. reported quarterly revenue of approximately $1.54 billion, marking a 3% year-over-year decline. The company's net income attributable to shareholders was roughly $896.6 million, or $2.49 per share, slightly down from $901.3 million, or $2.50 per share, in the same quarter last year. Average daily volume across all asset classes fell about 10.5% to 25.3 million contracts, with energy volumes falling 10.7% to 2.3 million contracts amid muted hedging demand in a low-volatility environment. Clearing and transaction fee revenue, which forms the core of CME's business, dropped roughly 5.3% to about $1.23 billion. Market data services, however, showed resilience with revenue increasing ~14% to around $203 million. Operating discipline remained intact with adjusted expenses managed effectively, although the drag from softer trading volumes weighed on the top-line. The coupon structure and fee model were challenged by lower energy sector activity and subdued macro volatility, but CME emphasized the strength of its diversified derivatives franchise, especially in interest rate, equities, FX and agricultural products. The firm reiterated focus on maintaining high margins, efficient capital deployment and returning value to shareholders via its variable dividend policy. Looking ahead, management noted that further clarity on macro policy and market volatility will influence trading activity, while structural drivers such as institutional participation, data services growth and international expansion remain strategic priorities. In this environment, CME views its position as a leading global derivatives marketplace to remain well-placed, albeit with near-term volume headwinds.

Growth On A Per-Share Basis

Looking ahead, we anticipate 5.6% average annual earnings per share growth over the next half decade. The main tailwind for the company is volatility in the public markets for the foreseeable future, as there remains enormous uncertainty on how various trade, geopolitical, global growth, and interest rate scenarios will play out to direct the near-term future of the American and global economies. Finally, we see the company's extensive network and large volume enabling it to drive growth through starting ancillary services and exchange products, as well as selling order flow data to third parties. As a result, we expect CME Group to continue growing earnings-per-share at a strong clip for the foreseeable future.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/E	23.3	24.2	19.6	9.7	25.6	24.7	32.8	21.8	23.1	25.0	24.3	25.0

The stock currently trades at 24.3 times this year's expected earnings. Given that the company has strong, but not exceptional earnings per share growth potential, we assign a fair value multiple estimate of 25x earnings, making CME roughly fairly valued at present.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030

CME Group's biggest competitive advantage is its network effect as a consolidator in the financial exchange space. Thanks to its large volume, it offers customers considerable liquidity, which is an extremely attractive feature for this industry. The company's large volume also gives it economies of scale, enabling it to offer competitive pricing without considerably hurting profitability. This not only enables the company to retain customers but also attracts new ones. As its customer count grows, its network effect only grows stronger, which in turn drives further liquidity and cost advantages, resulting in a virtuous cycle. Given that more than half of all interest rate-related futures in the world and nearly all North American interest rate-related futures are traded on the company's exchanges, it is clear that the company has established a dominant network effect in its core business.

While the company is not directly impacted by changes in stock market valuations, it did suffer during the last recession due to depressed market sentiment and customer bankruptcies, dramatically reducing activity on the exchanges. From peak to trough, CME Group's trailing twelve-month earnings per share fell from ~$3.45 in mid-2008 to $2.40 in mid-2009. The biggest long-term risk to the company is the potential for new regulations to disrupt the company's business model, which could break up its exchange and clearing operations or even limit the volatility on the exchanges or its pricing power. However, we do not see any threat developing in the near future, making the business fairly low-risk from a long-term perspective.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

CME Group benefits from increased volatility. Given the increasing geopolitical and macroeconomic uncertainties in the world today, this could bode well for the business. With a 9.4% expected annualized return over the next half decade, we rate shares as a Hold.
