Overview & Current Events

GATX Corporation (GATX) is a railcar leasing company that leases tank cars, freight cars and locomotives to companies in the petroleum, chemical, food/agriculture, and transportation industries. The company also offers services related to the assets that they lease, including routine maintenance, interior cleaning, repairs, and regulatory compliance work. The business operates through its 3 segments: Rail North America (69% of 2024 sales), Rail International (22% of 2024 sales), and Engine Leasing (6% of 2024 sales). GATX made the remaining 3% of 2024's revenue from other sources. GATX has a portfolio of about 148,500 railcars, 425 aircraft spare engines, and 24,000 tank containers.

As a railcar leasing business, management has shared that their capital allocation priorities are to continue investing in core, service-intensive assets (buying more railcars), to keep the balance sheet strong, and to return capital to shareholders through dividends and share buybacks. Although rail-related businesses might seem to belong to a dying industry, the rail car leasing market is expected to expand at over 7.2% annually through 2029, according to TMR. GATX is one of the leading lessors of railcars across many regions and has an advantage in its market due to its size and proven ability to buy and lease these assets.

On October 21st, 2025, GATX reported its Q3 results for the period ending September 30th, 2025. Adjusted EPS came in at $2.10 for the quarter, compared to $2.50 last year. The company's GAAP EPS was $2.25, reflecting a $0.15 per-share benefit from tax adjustments and other items. Revenues rose 8.4% year-over-year to $439.3 million. Fleet utilization remained strong across segments, with Rail North America at 98.9%, Rail Europe at 93.7%, and Rail India at 100%.

Management noted that market conditions were largely consistent with expectations, with stable demand across most railcar types and ongoing strength in the engine leasing business. The company continues to execute on its strategic initiatives, including the planned acquisition of Wells Fargo's rail operating lease assets, which remains on track to close in early 2026. GATX reaffirmed its full-year adjusted EPS guidance range of $8.50 to $8.90. We have utilized the midpoint of this range in our estimates.

Over the past decade, GATX has seen notable fluctuations in its EPS, reflecting shifts in the railcar leasing industry and macroeconomic conditions. Strong performance in 2015 ($5.30) and 2016 ($5.75) was driven by high railcar demand and favorable lease renewals, particularly in North America. Yet, a cyclical downturn in the rail market led to a decline in EPS to $4.72 in 2017. Recovery came in 2018 ($5.20) and 2019 ($5.51) as GATX capitalized on improved fleet utilization and rising lease rates.

The pandemic in 2020 hit the company hard, reducing EPS to $3.54, as global economic activity slowed and railcar demand weakened. GATX rebounded in 2021 ($5.07) with increased railcar deliveries and better market conditions. In 2022 ($6.07) and 2023 ($7.07), GATX achieved record highs, benefiting from strong lease rate escalations, higher fleet utilization, and effective capital allocation, positioning itself well in a recovering economy. We conservatively forecast that earnings-per-share will grow at ~5% annually over the next 5 years and that in 2030 EPS will be around $10.85.

Over the past decade, the business has also grown dividends at 3.9% annually, and over the past five years, dividends have grown at 4.8% annually. Over the next 5 years, we forecast dividend growth of about 5% annually, and we expect the business to continue buying back shares over the intermediate term, as they have done in most years in the past.

We expect GATX's growth to be fueled by the increasing demand for rail transport, which is largely driven by the rise of e-commerce and the expansion of global supply chains.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/E	9.9	8.0	12.8	14.4	14	19.3	18.7	17.3	14.1	16.4	18.0	16.5
Avg. Yld.	2.9%	3.5%	2.8%	2.4%	2.4%	2.8%	2.1%	2.0%	2.0%	1.8%	1.6%	1.7%

Over the past decade, GATX has averaged a P/E ratio of 14.5, and over the past five years, the stock has averaged a P/E ratio of 17.2. We estimate that over the intermediate term, the stock will trade for a P/E ratio of around 18.0. We view shares as modestly overvalued at their current levels. Today, the stock offers a low 1.6% dividend yield, which likely isn't substantial for investors seeking high dividend income, especially during the current interest rate environment.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

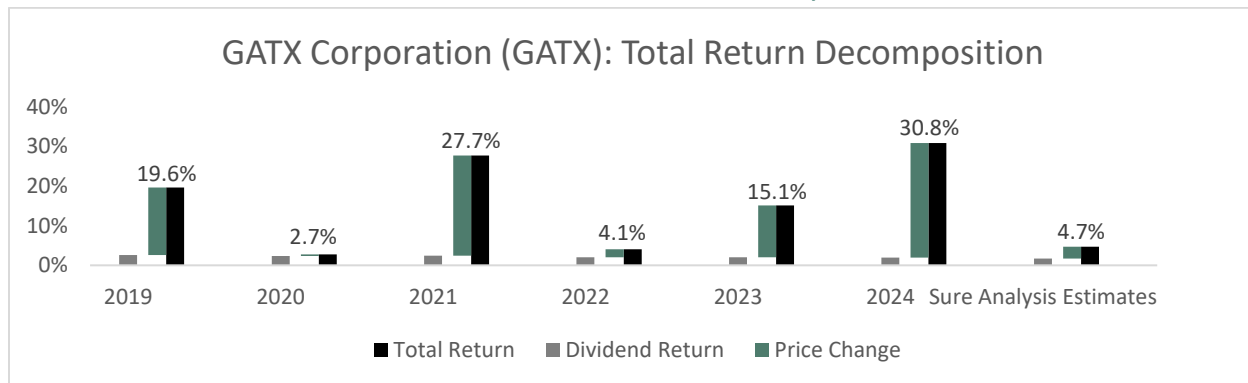

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	29%	28%	36%	34%	33%	54%	39%	34%	31%	29%	28%	28%

The business has averaged a payout ratio of 35% over the past decade. With a low expected payout ratio of just 28%, we believe that the dividend is safe for now and over the intermediate term from any cuts or decreases. GATX does have a large amount of long term debt on the balance sheet, but it has ample liquidity to pay off current liabilities, so we don't think this is a big concern. The business is susceptible to economic downturns, as seen by 2020's earnings-per-share figures, but GATX does have a competitive advantage as one of the leading railcar leasing companies in the world. Specifically, its extensive and diversified fleet coupled with its deep industry expertise and long term leases positions GATX nicely to navigate market fluctuations and maintain its strong market presence.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

The GATX Corporation is a company that is a market leader in leasing railcars. Based on our Dividend Risk score and total expected returns, we rate the stock as a hold. Specifically, total return prospects are expected to come in at 4.7% annually over the next five years. This projection is driven by the 1.6% yield, an estimated 5% annual increase in earnings-per-share, and a valuation headwind.
