Overview & Current Events

Greif began in 1877 as "Vanderwyst and Greif," a cooperage shop founded by one of four Greif brothers. One year later, the other three brothers joined the business, renaming it "Greif Bros. Company," making wooden barrels, casks and kegs to transport post-Civil Wars goods. The company later purchased nearly 300,000 acres of timberland to provide raw materials for its cooperage plants and still owns significant timber properties. Today the Delaware, Ohio-based company, simply known as Greif, is a global leader in industrial packaging products and services. Shares of Greif trade under two classes – non-voting A shares and B shares trading under the GEF.B symbol. This report focuses on the A shares and diluted A share equivalent. The $2.9 billion market cap company serves customers in 40 countries.

On September 1st, 2025, Greif sold its containerboard business to Packaging Corporation of America for $1.8 billion in cash. Greif pursued this deal in order to reduce its debt and grow its earnings more consistently. As the deal value is 60% of the market capitalization of Greif at the time of the deal, this sale is obviously a major one for Greif.

On November 5th, 2025, Greif reported results for the fourth quarter of fiscal 2025. Sales grew 3% over the prior year's quarter but adjusted earnings-per-share plunged from $0.59 to $0.01, missing the analysts' estimates by $0.62. The poor performance resulted from charges related to the sale of the containerboard business and higher taxes. Greif provided guidance for adjusted free cash flow of at least $315 million and adjusted EBITDA of at least $630 million in fiscal 2026.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031

Greif put together an average growth record in the past. In the 2005 through 2019 period, the company was able to grow earnings-per-share by 5.5% annually. 2020 proved to be a down year due to the pandemic but results for fiscal 2021 and 2022 bounced back dramatically. The company has a history of profitable, but cyclical results over the years.

In general, Greif has growth opportunities in the way of continued global expansion – especially as more items move about the global marketplace. We believe this is a long-term growth thesis that will continue aiding the company's core business. With that said, we are concerned over the somewhat volatile performance record of Greif and the cyclical nature of its business. Overall, we expect a recovery from abnormally low earnings this year and 4.0% average annual growth of earnings-per-share beyond this year.

Greif, Inc. (GEF)

Updated November 13th, 2025, by Aristofanis Papadatos

The stock of Greif has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio of 12.8 over the last nine years. We view this as a fair valuation level, given the cyclical nature of this business. The stock is currently trading at a price-to-earnings ratio of 14.0, which is higher than the historical average of the stock. If the stock trades at its fair valuation level in five years, it will incur a -1.7% annualized drag in its returns.

The dividend is also noteworthy. After being held at $0.42 per quarter for seven years, it was finally raised to $0.44 at the end of 2018. After being held at $0.44 for three years, the payout is now $0.56 and yields 3.7%.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
Payout	69%	57%	48%	44%	55%	32%	24%	33%	49%	110%	52%	47%

Greif provides comprehensive packaging solutions, with an emphasis on the industrial economy. The company operates in 40 countries, making the business difficult to replicate and offering a competitive advantage. With that said, Greif is subject to the whims of the global market and the industrial market in particular, which tends to be cyclical. Moreover, while long-term demand will continue to grow, we do not believe the firm has material pricing power in the long run.

During the Great Recession, Greif posted earnings-per-share of $4.18, $3.32 and $4.35 during the 2008 through 2010 stretch. Furthermore, the dividend remained on the rise during this time as well.

The payout ratio was 110% in 2025 due to depressed earnings. However, given the decent forward payout ratio of 52% and the strong balance sheet, which has resulted from the ample free cash flows of Greif and the recent sale of the containerboard business, the 3.7% dividend of the stock may be sustainable in the absence of a downturn.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Greif has exhibited decent but cyclical business performance over the last decade. It has been facing business headwinds in recent quarters due to the impact of inflation on its sales and its margins but it is likely to recover in the upcoming years. Greif could offer a 5-year average annual return of 5.6% thanks to 4.0% growth of earnings-per-share and a 3.7% dividend yield, partly offset by a -1.7% valuation headwind. The stock maintains its hold rating.
