Overview & Current Events

Quaker Chemical Corporation (KWR), which operates as Quaker Houghton, was founded in 1918 as Quaker Oil Products Corporation. The company develops, produces, and markets a broad range of formulated chemical specialty products and offers chemical management services for various heavy industrial and manufacturing applications worldwide. The company's business is divided into four segments, namely the Americas, Europe, Middle East and Africa, Asia/Pacific, and Global Specialty Businesses. With over 35 locations in 21 countries, Quaker Houghton has a global presence and generates more than 50% of net sales outside the United States.

On October 30th, 2025, the company announced results for the third quarter of 2025. KWR reported Q3 non-GAAP EPS of $2.08, which beat market estimates by $0.10.

Quaker Houghton delivered a confident performance in the third quarter of 2025, reporting net sales of $493.8 million, up 7% from a year ago as fresh customer wins and steady demand helped lift results. Organic sales volumes rose 3% year-over-year, supported by roughly 5% in new business and that momentum flowed through most regions despite softer pockets in the Americas and EMEA. The company generated net income of $30.5 million. Adjusted EBITDA came in at $82.9 million, marking a 5% gain and holding margins at 16.8%. Even with a choppy macro backdrop, KWR's ability to convert sales and manage mix appears to be holding firm, giving the quarter a relatively balanced feel.

Cash generation also remained a bright spot. The company produced $51.4 million in operating cash flow during Q3 and further trimmed its net leverage ratio to 2.4x, helped by ongoing debt reduction. Management noted that end-market conditions remain soft but predictable, and they expect normal seasonality into year-end. Still, the tone was pointedly optimistic as demand pipelines look healthy and KWR anticipates posting year-over-year revenue and earnings growth in the fourth quarter. With strategic initiatives gaining traction and Asia/Pacific continuing to outpace expectations, the company seems positioned to carry this momentum into 2026 and beyond.

Quaker Chemical Corporation is pursuing a range of strategies to realize long-term growth. It is expanding its product portfolio through R&D, focusing on developing innovative solutions. KWR also targets new markets in emerging economies such as Asia, Latin America, and the Middle East by establishing local operations and partnerships. Strategic acquisitions of complementary businesses are also a crucial part of its growth strategy, such as Coral Chemical, allowing for quick access to new technologies and markets. In addition, the company focuses on improving operational efficiency through lean manufacturing and automation, reducing costs, and enhancing profitability.

We have revised our EPS forecast to $7.17 for 2025, which matches the midpoint of analysts' estimates. Additionally, we believe that the firm can grow annually slightly faster than the Special Chemical industry's projected growth of 4%. With a 5.0% annual growth rate, KWR's EPS could reach $9.14 by 2030. Quaker Chemical Corporation's has a DPS growth rate of 4.5% and 5.4% for the last 10- and five-years, respectively. The company's approach to managing its capital supports the payment of competitive cash dividends. Thus, we have assumed a relatively moderate annual growth of 4.0%.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	Now	2030
Avg. P/E	21.6	21.0	28.6	27.9	31.3	38.6	36.1	29.4	29.6	26.9	19.5	30.0

For heavy industrial and manufacturing applications, Quaker Chemical Corporation enjoys a competitive edge in producing and selling a variety of Special Chemical formulations. Because of this edge over competitors, the business can increase profits and benefit its shareholders. Quaker Chemical demonstrated outstanding financial performance with a 10.0% increase in revenue during FY2022 compared to FY2021 during the most recent economic downturn, and despite macroeconomic challenges, the company maintained resilient profitability in 2024, generating $1.84 billion in net sales while executing strategic acquisitions, cost-saving initiatives, and shareholder returns totaling $82.4 million through dividends and share repurchases. In Q3 2025, Quaker Houghton, the company also continued returning capital to shareholders, repurchasing 29,791 shares for approximately $3.8 million during the quarter.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Quaker Chemical Corporation earns a hold rating on the stock premised upon the 15.3% annualized total returns for the medium-term, derived from the forecasted earnings-per-share growth of 5.0%, the 1.5% dividend yield, a valuation tailwind, and a moderate dividend risk score.
