Overview & Current Events

Value Line is a financial services company which offers investment research and fund management operations. The company was organized in 1982 as a successor to the Arnold Bernhard & Co., and investors should note that Arnold Bernhard & Co retains control of 91.6% of all outstanding VALU shares. Value Line has long published industry-leading periodicals such as the Value Line Investment Survey and the Value Line 600. The company has adapted to the changing times, offering many of its publications, newsletters, and other such information products through digital channels. Value Line sells subscriptions to various clients including individual investors, professional fund managers, and libraries. In addition, Value Line holds a substantial non-voting interest in EULAV Asset Management, which is the investment advisor and distributor for the Value Line Family of mutual funds.

Value Line is a steady business with a stable, but not meaningfully increasing, subscription base. To that point, Value Line generated $36 million in revenues in fiscal year 2016, and $35 million in fiscal year 2025, showing a slight decline in nominal terms and a meaningful decline in the business when adjusted for inflation over the past decade. Both Value Line's investment research offerings and mutual fund portfolios face significant competition.

On December 15th, 2025, Value Line reported its financial results for the second quarter of its fiscal year 2026 period ending October 31st, 2025. Earnings per share of 60 cents fell by a penny from the 61 cents earned in the same portion of last year. The company enjoyed stronger results from its ownership stake in the EULAV Asset Management business, but this was offset by a drop in revenues from Value Line's investment research services and a decline in revenues associated with licensing the Value Line name to ETF providers. While Q2 results were down slightly, the company's Q1 results were up year-over-year, and we also expect stronger results in the back half of FY'26 thanks to strong asset markets and the likelihood of further improvement in the EULAV operations.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Value Line has more than doubled its earnings per share over the past decade. However, the company has not grown top-line revenues whatsoever. Rather, it has enjoyed stronger returns on its investment portfolio along with the benefits of a modest share repurchase program. As of October 31st, 2025, the company held $38 million in short-term investments along with $44 million in cash. The company actively manages these investments and cash position and generates a large chunk of its total earnings from this portfolio. Over the past few years, thanks to higher interest rates and strong stock market performance, Value Line has generated more investment income than it did in prior years. We are uncertain if this positive trend will continue. That's especially true if the Federal Reserve cuts interest rates significantly, which could lower Value Line's future returns on its fixed income holdings. We have cut our annualized EPS growth outlook to 1% as the Fed seems intent on a longer rate cut cycle going forward.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	Now	2031
Avg. P/E	21.9	16.4	12.8	18.6	19.9	12.6	26.1	23.9	17.9	20.0	16.3	19.0
Avg. Yld.	4.0%	3.5%	3.6%	3.2%	3.2%	2.8%	2.6%	1.6%	2.5%	2.8%	3.3%	3.1%

Value Line has averaged a 19x P/E ratio since 2015 and a 20.1x P/E ratio over the past five years. Given the stability in the company’s business and the limited top-line growth prospects, we do not expect any considerable change in its valuation going forward. Value Line has averaged a 3.0% dividend yield since 2016, and we expect shares to continue to offer a similar yield in future years. The current 3.3% yield is slightly above our long-term forecast.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
Payout	87%	64%	48%	62%	52%	35%	36%	54%	56%	55%	54%	60%

Value Line has a tremendous balance sheet. It has no debt or other meaningful long-term obligations. And on the assets side, it holds a considerable chunk of cash, fixed income, and equity investments in comparison to its market capitalization. The company’s subscription-based revenues have proven to be stable throughout various economic climates, and the mutual fund business is also fairly predictable. Over the longer-term, Value Line faces intense competition in both of its business lines, which will limit its growth prospects. However, the company has plenty of resources with which to adapt to the changing financial services landscape.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Value Line’s stability and strong balance sheet are appealing aspects. However, the company’s slow growth rate puts a limit on the firm’s forward prospects. Historically, Value Line was able to generate more earnings out of its investment portfolio thanks to higher interest rates and a rapidly rising overall U.S. stock market, but we are not sure investors can count on similar conditions over the next five years. Value Line shares are now trading at a moderate discount to our fair value estimate, but the gap is not wide enough to change our overall opinion too much. Our total return outlook is 7.1% annualized, and shares remain at a hold rating today.
