Overview & Current Events

Banco Macro S.A. is one of the leading universal banks in Argentina and the largest domestically-owned private bank in the country by branch network. The bank provides a comprehensive suite of financial products and services to over 6 million retail customers and 212,000 corporate clients. While it offers a full range of traditional banking services, like savings accounts, credit cards, personal loans, and corporate financings, it distinguishes itself through a strategic focus on underserved regional markets and a dominant presence in Argentina's interior provinces. The bank also serves as the exclusive financial agent for four Argentine provinces (Jujuy, Salta, Misiones, and Tucumán), giving it a stable base of public sector deposits and unique access to regional economic ecosystems. The bank has a market cap of $6.91 billion. It pays dividends on a monthly basis.

On November 26th, 2025, Banco Macro S.A. reported its Q3 results for the period ending September 30th, 2025. The company's top-line performance showed Net Interest Income of about $517.5 million, an 8% year-over-year decrease despite a 69% expansion in total financing, as higher interest expenses on deposits significantly pressured margins. This was supported by Net Fee Income of $133.7 million, which nonetheless faced headwinds from a decline in credit card and credit-related fee volumes during the period. However, the bank reported a Net Loss of $25.0 million, a sharp reversal from the net income of about $90.6 million recorded in 3Q 2024. This resulted in a Loss per ADR of $0.39, primarily caused by a 424% year-over-year surge in loan loss provisions and an increase in administrative expenses linked to personnel bonuses and severance payments. We believe the bank has an earnings power of $7.40 under "normal conditions", which we have embedded in our estimates.

Banco Macro's last decade really shows a bank trying to survive and adapt through some pretty wild macro conditions. From 2015 to 2017, things were relatively normal, including stable rates, solid private credit demand, which is probably the best reference point for its "normalized" earning power. That changed in 2018 with the return of hyperinflation accounting. The reported USD loss that year wasn't a real operational collapse, as the bank was still profitable in pesos, but a consequence of currency devaluation and the way results had to be restated.

More recently, the numbers are skewed by the huge 2023 EPS spike and the Itaú Argentina acquisition. The 2023 result was mostly a non-cash gain from holding assets that beat inflation during a hyper-devaluation episode. Now the story is more about consolidation. By buying Itaú's local business, Macro used a bad macro environment to expand into Buenos Aires and pick up market share when organic growth was basically frozen.

We forecast 5% growth from our earnings power moving forward, because the efficiency and scale benefits from the Itaú Argentina integration could boost results, but that could be offset by a tough macro transition. Even though the bank is rotating out of low-yield government paper and back into higher-margin private lending, that growth is running into near-term pressure from narrowing net interest margins as rates normalize. On top of that, FX volatility is still the big wildcard for ADR investors. Because of hyperinflation accounting, even strong profits in pesos can get wiped out in dollar terms if the currency moves the wrong way.

The bank has historically paid dividends, but amounts can move from insignificant to major, without a clear policy in place or intention for progressive growth. The bank has been paying a monthly variable dividend since August 2015.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Avg. P/E	5.4	9.2	10.6	---	6.6	3.5	4.0	2.9	0.6	10.4	14.2	5.0
Avg. Yld.	1.9%	1.5%	0.8%	3.1%	5.1%	---	---	7.8%	10.3%	10.1%	4.1%	10.6%

Historically, Banco Macro's valuation de-rated from a 10x average to a "distressed" 3.5x–5.5x range following the 2018 crisis and the implementation of hyperinflation accounting. We have set our fair P/E at 5x our EPS power forecast, thus effectively pricing in a necessary "Argentina Discount." This accounts for the lower quality of inflation-adjusted earnings and provides a critical margin of safety against persistent FX volatility.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2030
Payout	10%	13%	8%	---	33%	---	---	23%	6%	105%	58%	53%

The case for Banco Macro rests on a balance sheet characterized by "excess" strength, with capital adequacy ratios (Tier 1 ~30%) that far exceed regulatory mandates, offering a rare level of stability in a volatile market. This fiscal robustness is paired with a geographic moat. As the exclusive financial agent for four interior provinces, Banco Macro maintains a locked-in, low-cost deposit base and a captive retail audience that competitors cannot easily penetrate. However, for US-based investors, any operational success is constantly at the mercy of intense "translation risk." Despite strong local performance and a dominant branch network, aggressive Peso devaluations as well as the complexities of hyperinflation accounting mean that dollar-denominated returns are never guaranteed. It remains a high-quality institution operating in a high-risk jurisdiction, where the primary threat is not the bank's management, but the unpredictable macro floor of the country itself. Do not blindly trust the dividend.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Banco Macro stands as a high-quality defensive institution with a dominant regional moat and sector-leading capital ratios, yet it remains a high-risk vehicle for US investors due to extreme foreign exchange volatility. Along with the lack of progressive dividend growth and our assessment that the stock is significantly overvalued at current levels, we rate Banco Macro a Sell.
