Overview & Current Events

On May 23rd, 2023, ABB changed its ticker from ABB to ABBNY because it was delisted from NYSE and was listed on an OTC (over-the-counter) market. ABB is a global provider of automation technologies and power solutions. It operates in more than 100 countries and has four business units: Electrification Products, Robotics & Discrete Automation, Motion and Industrial Automation. ABB is based in Switzerland, but domestic investors can initiate an ownership stake in the company through American Depository Receipts (ADRs) that trade with a market capitalization of US$156 billion under the ticker ABBNY.

In late January, ABB reported (1/29/26) financial results for the fourth quarter of fiscal 2025. Comparable revenue and orders grew 9% and 32%, respectively, over the prior year's quarter thanks to strong demand in the electrification segment, with particularly high demand from data centers. EBITDA margin expanded from 16.6% to 17.6% thanks to price hikes. Earnings-per-share grew 30%, from $0.54 to $0.70.

ABB just raised its dividend by 18% and provided strong guidance for 2025. It expects 6%-9% growth of comparable revenue and a slight improvement in the EBITDA margin. Management also expects a positive book-to-bill ratio, i.e., it expects backlog to increase this year. Thanks to strong order intake amid soaring demand from booming AI data centers, the stock has soared 57% in the last 12 months. We expect all-time high earnings-per-share of $3.50 this year.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

ABB's growth over the last decade has been far from compelling. The company faced a downturn due to the pandemic in 2020 but it has recovered strongly thanks to the recovery of the global economy. Moreover, ABB has a number of current growth opportunities that lead us to believe its future performance will be stronger than its historical track record. The Electrification segment, which generates 45% of the total revenues, seems to have the most promising prospects thanks to strong demand in key segments, such as data centers, rail, wind and electric vehicle infrastructure. Nevertheless, due to the high comparison base formed by the blowout earnings expected this year, we expect 2% average annual growth of earnings-per-share beyond this year.

ABB has traded at an average price-to-earnings ratio of 20.8 over the last decade. With that said, this sample includes several years (2015-2017) in which the stock traded with an elevated P/E ratio. We believe that fair value for a company of ABB's caliber lies somewhere around 16 times earnings. The stock is currently trading at a price-to-earnings ratio of 24.3 thanks to the enthusiasm of the market over record orders from AI data centers. If ABB trades at our estimated fair earnings multiple in five years, it will incur an -8.0% annualized drag in its returns.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Payout	85.2%	73.8%	58.6%	63.7%	84.7%	37.8%	67.7%	45.8%	45.1%	39.8%	34.9%	35.0%

ABB has global businesses that are either the #1 or #2 player in attractive markets, with strong secular growth. The company expects its business markets to grow by 3.5%-4.0% per year on average over the long run. Thanks to its dominant position in its segments, ABB has a strong reputation and thus enjoys a significant competitive advantage over its peers.

Moreover, the company has a rock-solid balance sheet and pays negligible interest expense. On the other hand, the performance of ABB is greatly affected by economic growth, which is beyond its control. Due to this vulnerability, the stock tends to underperform the market during sell-offs. Consequently, only investors who can tolerate significant price pressure should consider this stock.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

ABB has a variety of appealing characteristics. It is a global business with leadership in many segments of the industrial sector. Moreover, it is thriving right now thanks to record orders from AI data centers. However, we are concerned over the volatile and unreliable business performance of ABB. The stock has more than tripled off its bottom in 2022 and hence it could offer a -4.3% average annual return over the next five years, as its 2.0% earnings growth and its 1.4% dividend may be offset by an -8.0% valuation drag. ABB maintains its hold rating.
