Overview & Current Events

Enbridge is an oil & gas company that operates the following segments: Liquids Pipelines, Gas Distributions, Energy Services, Gas Transmission & Midstream, and Green Power & Transmission. Enbridge bought Spectra Energy for $28 billion in 2016 and has become one of the largest midstream companies in North America. Enbridge was founded in 1949 and is headquartered in Calgary, Canada. All figures in this report are in U.S. Dollars unless noted otherwise.

Enbridge reported its fourth quarter earnings results in February. The company generated revenues of CAD$17.2 billion during the period, which was up 6% compared to the previous year's quarter, and which pencils out to US$12.5 billion. During the quarter, Enbridge managed to grow its adjusted EBITDA by 2% year over year, to CAD$5.2 billion, up from CAD$5.1 billion during the previous year's quarter.

During the fourth quarter, Enbridge was able to generate distributable cash flows of CAD$3.2 billion, which equates to US$2.3 billion, or US$1.06 on a per-share basis. Distributable cash flows rose by 4% in 2025, relative to 2024, on a full-year basis, which is a solid but not spectacular growth rate, but currency rate movements resulted in a higher growth rate in US Dollars. For the current year, Enbridge is forecasting distributable cash flows of CAD$5.70 to CAD$6.10, which pencils out to US$4.30 at the midpoint of the guidance range, and which implies a low-single-digit growth rate compared to last year's per-share DCF of US$4.20.

Enbridge operates an asset-heavy business, causing the company to record a high amount of depreciation expenses. Since this is a non-cash item, its cash flows are usually much higher than its net earnings, and since cash flows are what Enbridge requires to make growth investments and dividend payments, it makes sense to focus on those.

Enbridge produced reasonably consistent distributable cash flow growth over the last decade, although not at a high rate. Takeovers such as the one of Spectra Energy have caused Enbridge's share count to rise over the years, which is why distributable cash flow-per-share declined in some years even though company-wide distributable cash flow kept climbing. Enbridge put billions worth of projects into service over the last couple of years, and more growth projects are under construction, which includes new energy assets such as wind farms as well as hydrocarbon assets such as pipelines. According to management, growth will persist going forward, as Enbridge targets long-term cash flow per share growth of around 5%. Our estimate is lower than that, however, based on Enbridge's past track record, and due to the fact that dilution remains somewhat of a headwind for the company's per-share growth rate as long as Enbridge continues to issue shares for takeovers.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	Now	2031
P/CF	12.3	14.5	9.8	11.7	8.7	10.0	9.8	9.2	10.9	11.4	12.3	11.0

Enbridge has been valued at a low-double-digit price-to-cash flow multiple throughout the majority of the last decade. Shares currently trade at a little above 12x this year's forecasted distributable cash flows, according to management's guidance, which is slightly above our fair value estimate.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
Payout	50%	66%	66%	64%	69%	67%	68%	67%	67%	65%	66%	69%

Enbridge paid out up to half of its cash flows through 2016, but starting in 2017, its payout ratio rose to roughly two thirds of the cash flows that it generates. The company has guided for meaningful dividend growth throughout the next couple of years, but dividend growth will likely be lower compared to what we have seen over the last decade.

Enbridge's cash generation is not very cyclical, thus the dividend seems safe.

Enbridge is one of the largest pipeline operators in North America. Its vast asset footprint serves as a tremendous competitive advantage, as it would take tens of billions of dollars of investments from new market entrants if they wanted to be able to replace Enbridge's assets. Competitive risks, therefore, are low. Due to its fee-based nature Enbridge's business is not very cyclical, and commodity prices are mostly a pass-through item that impacts both revenues and costs, they are thus mostly neutral to profits and cash flows. During the Great Recession, the company was able to grow its cash flows and earnings further. Since the infrastructure that Enbridge provides is needed whether the economy is doing well or not, recessions are not a major threat for Enbridge.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Enbridge is a leading midstream player in North America, and management touts a solid growth outlook over the coming years. Enbridge delivered record distributable cash flows in 2025 and management believes that another record will be hit this year. Investors also get a nice dividend yield of more than 5% from Enbridge. The total return outlook is solid but not great, we thus rate Enbridge a hold today.
