Overview & Current Events

Broadcom designs, develops, and sells semiconductors under the following business units: Wired infrastructure, wireless communication, enterprise storage and industrial. Its offerings include data center chips, factory automation, energy systems and power generation, broadband access, and home connectivity. Broadcom is a fabless semiconductor company, which means that the products it designs are manufactured by other companies/foundries. Broadcom domiciled to the US a couple of years ago and is now headquartered in San Jose, CA.

When Broadcom reported its second quarter earnings results on June 3rd, the company reported revenues of $22.2 billion, which represents an increase of 48% compared to the prior year's quarter. The strong revenue growth performance was driven by AI data center investments by many of Broadcom's customers. The company beat estimates by $70 million, as analysts were expecting a slightly smaller revenue increase for the quarter.

Broadcom delivered earnings-per-share of $2.44 for the fiscal second quarter, which was ahead of the analyst consensus estimate. The company expects that revenues will come in at around $29.4 billion during the current quarter, which would represent a nice revenue increase on a year-over-year basis as well as on a sequential basis. Broadcom is forecasted to see its earnings-per-share grow at a strong pace of around 70% this year.

Growth on a Per-Share Basis

Broadcom's profitability has exploded over the last decade. Indeed, its earnings-per-share rose more than fivefold between 2016 and 2025. This earnings growth was driven by a significant amount of M&A, where Broadcom has always been very active, which includes the merger with Avago in 2015.

These acquisitions naturally have impacted Broadcom's growth tremendously, so what we see in the above table is not purely the result of Broadcom's organic growth rate. By moving towards acquisitions in the software industry with its CA takeover, Broadcom has moved away from a pure chip focus and diversified the business to some degree.

Broadcom's biggest market is wireless communication, where the company owns a strong connectivity portfolio that includes advanced LTE, Bluetooth 5.x, Wi-Fi, GNSS (GPS, Galileo, etc.), and so on. Broadcom is also well positioned in the enterprise storage market, where it provides switching and other connectivity solutions and storage products such as SSD controllers. These markets will continue to grow, including thanks to massive investments in AI data centers by the Hyperscalers such as Microsoft. Broadcom will also benefit from its AI semiconductor business that is showing very strong growth and that has a nice order intake pace. Between these different growth factors, we believe that a longer-term earnings-per-share growth rate in the 15% range is realistic.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	Now	2031
Avg. P/E	13.5	14.4	10.6	13.8	15.8	18.9	12.4	19.9	34.9	54.3	33.9	24.0
Avg. Yld.	1.6%	2.1%	3.2%	3.6%	3.7%	2.7%	3.5%	2.2%	1.2%	0.6%	0.7%	0.7%

Broadcom's shares have risen sharply in recent years, which has made them more expensive compared to how they were valued, on average, over the last decade. Shares are trading above our fair value estimate, as the recent share price increase was more pronounced than Broadcom's earnings growth. We believe that Broadcom's valuation will decrease in the future and that this will be a headwind for total returns going forward.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
Payout	22%	30%	34%	50%	59%	51%	44%	44%	44%	35%	22%	18%

Broadcom's dividend payout ratio has risen considerably over the last decade, due to the huge dividend increases that Broadcom has offered to its owners over that time frame. Since 2010, Broadcom increased its dividend by an incredible factor of more than 100. Broadcom's dividend still looks relatively safe, however, as it is well-covered by both profits as well as by the cash flows that the company generates.

Broadcom did not remain profitable during the Great Recession, but the company was much smaller and less diversified back then. Due to low fixed costs, as Broadcom is operating a fabless business, and due to a lot of diversification across industries and across geographic markets, the company is well-prepared for future recessions. Due to its strong IP portfolio with tens of thousands of patents, Broadcom is well positioned in the markets it targets.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

Broadcom is one of the largest semiconductor companies in the world. The company's fabless model results in high cash flows and low capital expenditures, which is why Broadcom has ample free cash that is available for dividend payments and acquisitions. Industry tailwinds should allow for strong earnings growth in both the current year and beyond -- but due to the stock's high valuation, we only rate Broadcom a hold right here.
