Overview & Current Events

Landstar System is a transportation company focused on providing trucking deliveries and related services. It operates all throughout North America, including Canada and Mexico, offering both truckload and less-than-truckload deliveries, rail intermodal, air cargo, and so on. The company also has an insurance segment which provides clients with risk and claims management services.

Landstar has enjoyed strong growth over the years thanks to its differentiated business model. Unlike many trucking companies, Landstar operates with an asset-light business model. It does not invest too heavily in its own trucks, warehouses, or other hard assets, instead relying on its clients and third-party capacity providers for fulfillment.

Landstar has benefited from its involvement in the Mexico and cross-border cargo market, as manufacturing activity in Mexico has surged in recent years. More broadly, Landstar is taking advantage of the continued rise of e-commerce.

That became particularly apparent in 2021 and 2022, as Landstar's revenues and earnings skyrocketed amid the pandemic-driven online shopping boom. Not surprisingly, however, results have trailed off as economic conditions have normalized. The downtrend continued in 2024, and 2025 ended up accelerating that decline.

On July 28th, 2026, the company announced its Q2 earnings. Q2 EPS of $1.44 jumped from the $1.20 reported in the same quarter of 2025 but missed expectations. Revenues rose 18% year-over-year to $1.43 billion. This was powered by an 18% surge in heavy haul volumes in Q2. Management noted that Q3 is off to a strong start, with revenue per load trending 26% higher for July 2026 versus the prior year. However, the company's insurance costs surged 30% year-over-year and SG&A expenses also spiked, leading to the earnings miss.

Landstar had grown earnings at a double-digit rate over the past decade up through 2022, though the recent earnings slump has reversed much of that progress. We think 2025 was the bottom for Landstar and that earnings should enjoy a substantial rebound this year. We expect 9.0% annualized earnings per share growth over the longer-term as the industry gets back on track.

The company has grown its regular dividend at 18.4% annualized since 2016 and 13.9% over the past five years. That includes Landstar's most recent dividend hike, of 10%, to 44 cents per quarter, which it announced in July 2026. We expect Landstar to continue posting approximately 10% annualized dividend growth going forward, powered by both strong earnings growth and the firm's recent tendency toward offering a higher regular dividend payout ratio. The company also typically pays a sizable special dividend, though we don't include that in the regular DPS calculation.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	Now	2031
Avg. P/E	26.0	24.7	15.0	19.7	26.9	17.7	13.6	26.2	32.8	42.9	30.1	24.0
Avg. Yld.	0.4%	0.4%	0.4%	0.6%	0.6%	0.5%	0.6%	0.7%	0.8%	1.1%	1.0%	1.4%

Landstar has averaged a 27x and a 25x P/E ratio over the past five and 10 years, respectively. We are forecasting a P/E multiple of 24 over the long-term as we believe the firm's unique business model can maintain a higher valuation level than most of its trucking industry peers. Shares appear to be overvalued today.

Historically, Landstar shares have offered a tiny regular dividend yield. Over time, we expect the yield to rise to 1.4%. That said, Landstar has paid considerable special dividends each of the past six years which add to its overall yield. If Landstar continues its special dividend policy, that would improve the firm's attractiveness from an income perspective.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
Payout	10%	9%	10%	12%	16%	9%	9%	17%	25%	47%	31%	33%

Landstar is much safer than the average trucking company. For one thing, it maintains a large net cash position and has virtually no long-term debt whatsoever. For another, Landstar's asset-light business model gives it more flexibility during industry downturns. We also believe Landstar's expertise in the Mexican market and cross-border transit services are an attractive niche that can help deliver superior returns over time. Given the company's low dividend payout ratio, it can easily cover the regular dividend even during a prolonged cyclical downturn or recession. Landstar spends much of its excess cash on share buybacks and special dividends, leaving plenty of wiggle room before the common dividend would be at risk even during a recession.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

We have a favorable view of Landstar System's business model and expect the company to return to strong growth as the cycle turns. The firm is starting to build quite an attractive dividend growth track record as well and its low payout ratio leaves plenty of room for future increases. We believe Landstar's long-term business model remains attractive despite the recent issues with soft demand and higher expenses related to vehicle accidents. That said, the 5.3% annualized total return outlook isn't high enough to warrant an upgrade; we stay at a hold for now.
