Overview & Current Events

L'Oréal is one of the world's largest cosmetics groups, with a portfolio of 37 global brands. The French company offers shampoos, hair-care and skincare products, shower gels, cleansers, styling and make-up items, perfumes and related goods. Its globally recognised brands include Garnier, Maybelline New York, Giorgio Armani Beauty, Kiehl's, Urban Decay, Biotherm and Ralph Lauren. L'Oréal holds a 7.2% stake in the share capital of Sanofi and controls 13.1% of its voting rights. L'Oréal generated nearly $52 billion sales last year and is based in Paris, France. All figures in this report have been converted to USD unless otherwise noted.

On February 12th, 2026, L'Oréal increased its dividend by +2.9% to €7.20 ($8.46). Also, the loyalty bonus (see below) increased the payout by 10%, bringing it to €7.92, with a correspondingly higher amount in USD. Note that the much larger increase compared to FY2024's dividend in USD terms is due to the appreciation of the Euro during this period. We don't speculate on the FY2026 dividend to be paid in 2027.

On July 29th, 2026, L'Oréal released its H1 results for the six-month period ending June 30th, 2026. In Q2, in particular, sales were $13.25 billion, reflecting +6.0% like-for-like growth, +6.3% adjusted like-for-like growth, and +8.2% reported growth. L'Oréal continued to outperform the global beauty market, with adjusted growth across every region. Europe remained the largest market, while SAPMENA-SSA grew double digits and North Asia continued its recovery.

E-commerce also maintained double-digit growth. Division-wise, Professional Products delivered +10.1% adjusted like-for-like growth, with sales of $1.66 billion, driven by premium haircare. Consumer Products grew +4.6%, with sales of $4.87 billion, supported by haircare and makeup innovation. L'Oréal Luxe posted +4.7% growth, with sales of $4.43 billion, benefiting from fragrances and China. Dermatological Beauty grew +11.1%, with sales of $2.28 billion, led by La Roche-Posay, CeraVe and SkinCeuticals. L'Oréal also secured a 50-year Gucci Beauty licence and agreed to acquire a majority stake in India's Innovist. We have set our FY2026 EPS estimate to $15.30.

L'Oréal's EPS and DPS, as shown in the table, have both been affected by FX over the past decade when expressed in U.S. dollars. The company's EPS and DPS have grown by around 10% and 12% over the last five years, respectively. Earnings should keep growing at a strong pace, powered by organic growth, price increases, and the gross profit margin expansion due to L'Oréal's economies of scale. The company is a consumer staples behemoth not only in Europe, but also globally, enjoying massive scale capabilities that can dominate global demand trends. We are forecasting a 10% intermediate growth rate, assuming no impacts from FX. Dividends are paid once annually. L'Oréal boasts one of the longest dividend growth records amongst European firms, with its latest dividend increase of 2.9% marking 26 years of annual increases (in Euros). The company offers a unique perk to its long-term shareholders. Those holding shares for at least two calendar years receive a 10% “loyalty bonus” on the original dividend. We are forecasting DPS growth of around 8.5% through 2031.

Valuation Analysis

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	Now	2031
Avg. P/E	29.9	27.3	30.9	37.4	41.1	41.5	28.8	32.1	35.5	31.6	29.0	26.0
Avg. Yld.	2.0%	2.0%	1.8%	1.5%	1.5%	1.3%	1.9%	1.7%	1.7%	2.0%	1.9%	2.0%

L'Oréal has traded at elevated multiples over the past decade, reflecting investors' willingness to pay a premium for its qualities, market dominance, and growth. The company's "loyalty bonus" discourages share sales, further contributing to sustained valuation premiums. The valuation has normalized recently. Still, we believe the stock is slightly overvalued at its current levels. We are still utilizing a more reasonable P/E of 26.0 in our estimates, which we believe is a fair multiple for the French giant.

Safety, Quality, Competitive Advantage, & Recession Resiliency

Year	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2024	2025	2026	2031
Payout	60%	56%	56%	58%	63%	58%	57%	57%	59%	63%	55%	52%

L'Oréal's dividend should be considered very safe. The company benefits from consistent profitability, which allowed it to keep raising its payout even during the Great Financial Crisis. The payout ratio currently stands at a healthy level of 55%. L'Oréal's competitive advantage lies in its sheer size, which has resulted in the company accumulating a significant market share. Its companies have massive brand values, generating consistent sales globally. Hence investors should expect a relatively stable performance even under a harsh recession, as was the case during 2007-2008. The company proved totally insulated during the COVID-19 pandemic as well. Finally, L'Oréal has a pristine balance sheet, with its long-term debt/equity ratio standing at about 0.3.

Final Thoughts & Recommendation

L'Oréal is one of the most respected European stocks, featuring an incredibly consistent record of shareholder returns. The company's capital returns have been growing for years without interruption, while its “loyalty bonus” program has been a phenomenal strategy to reduce share price fluctuations over time. Total return potential comes in at 9.4% per annum, driven by 10% growth in earnings and the 1.9% dividend yield, offset by a 2.2% annual valuation headwind. Note that France applies a dividend withholding tax of 12.8% to non-residents under typical circumstances, which could hamper our expected returns. However, the loyalty bonus would boost them. L'Oréal earns a hold rating.
